You step out of the bathroom after taking a moment to compose yourself and wash your face, and when you do, Midori seems to already be waking up, sitting up slowly and gently rubbing the sleep out of her eyes.

"Mnnh--? What was that...?" She murmurs, her voice still thick with somnolence, and it's with a slow blink of her crimson eyes that she regards you with mild confusion. Earlier, she'd been looking at you with those same eyes with something akin to hate. A bit later, you'd seen them wet with tears. A little more after that, contrition.

Midori has pretty eyes, you decide. But that's beside the point, really.

You ask her what she's doing in your room. Of course, you appreciate what she's done, and nobody has really ever picked up after you besides Mami so that's nice - but sleeping in the same room as your boss isn't really something subordinates do, right?

Midori blinks at you again, before managing an awkward smile.

"N-no, that's not something subordinates really do, sempai." She shakes her head. "It's...it's just that you're in my room. I managed to teach Miss Valnikov how to make takoyaki a few hours ago, and I thought a nap would be alright. I found you here, in my room, and..." She frowns, slightly. "...it looked like you were having a nightmare. You know, twitching in your sleep, mumbling, turning back and forth. I was going to leave you alone and use the other room, but I thought that it'd be better if I at least slept beside you. I find that it helps with nightmares, and if anything, I'd have been here in case anything happened."

It's then that she looks at you curiously.

"It's not that there's anything wrong with two girls sleeping in one bed, is it, sempai?" Her frown deepens, before she shakes her head. "Look, I draw porn of you, sempai, and admittedly I like the idea of sleeping with you, but it's not all I think about. I can be concerned about my own boss' welfare too without wanting to jump her bones every chance I get, can't I?"

You have no reply to that, but the expression on your face must have been telling enough that she lets out a sigh, a resigned smile on her face.

"It's fine, sempai. Nothing to worry about." Midori covers her mouth in a yawn, before stretching her arms over her head. "I guess it's time for us to kill cute, fluffy bears for sport and pleasure?" The green-haired girl pulls what looks like a yellow rubber band from her wrist, before reaching behind her to gather her hair into a ponytail. Two, three snaps, and what was once a long, thick mass of green is tied up neatly. "I think shooting animals is pretty cruel, sempai, but I'll try anything once. We're in Siberia, after all."

You manage to nod at this, stepping into your shoes. You should probably ask Kharn if she has any boots to lend you - you doubt heels would be useful much in treading snow. The last thing you want to happen is you eating dirt while getting chased by irate bears.

You pull on your jacket and zip the front up. A shake of your right wrist, and your Shield manifests, clamping onto your right arm, over the sleeve of the bulky black garment that'll keep you from becoming a meat popsicle later.

You're not planning on meeting Pinky anytime soon, but you'll risk it if there's an emergency.

Well here's a tip for you.
They do drink it, the supermarket I worked at had to lock our cleaning supplies up because the local ethnicities decided to drink it, they don't go to the hospital because they either don't care or don't have the money and they drink that because it is easier to steal or purchase when drunk than actual alcohol.

And the chemicals in them do screw you up worse than alcohol.

Same thing as spray paint because it kills brain cells very fast along with your internal organs.

You make your way towards the elevator, where true to his word, Souji is waiting - and rather impatiently, at that. Fiddling with a smartphone in his hands.

"Took you long enough." The white-haired director says after a moment, a smirk on his suddenly very punchable face. "What, she ask for seconds, or something?" He nods towards Midori, who has the decency to go a hot crimson at the young man's implications.

This actually seems like a good middle-ground between old Murderface and the more reasonable Chiaki pranking style we're moving towards.

I suggest we 'requisition' a bunch of rubber bullets from somewhere as a way of telling off people we don't want to actually injure/kill.

Well, our reputation is plenty violent right? I think we need to only make threats when absolutely necessary. And never a threat we won't carry out. If we boast too much, it'll weaken that reputation and our status. Whereas, if we deadpan while informing someone of violence we will visit upon them, and then remain absolutely calm as we carry it out, we maintain our rep, and at the same time should be able to threaten people by merely looking at them.

Funny, but still bad idea.
First - we might accidentally our DEagle brand DEagle instead of gun with rubber bullets and consequences would never be the same.
Second - we might be socially retarded, but we are well versed in arts of gun-fu and take it too seriously to even attempt turning it into joke.

You are not the sharpest knife in the drawer when it comes to backtalk, that much you're willing to admit. You're not given to insults and verbal posturing, although coarse language comes easily to you enough to earn Mami's disapproval in that respect. Your idea of a scathing retort pretty much involves hurting the other party hard enough and fast enough that they end up in a curled fetal position on the floor, unable to make any more wisecracks due to all of the hurting. And the pain. And the bleeding.

But you remind yourself that those days are long past you, now. You're not just a Vindicare anymore - you're a Warmaster-in-training, and you can't operate with the same kind of parameters as you did back then, soul-crushingly depressing as that sounds. Things must be handled with tact, with finesse, with utmost consideration. You've done a very good job with Midori, earlier, no reason why you can't handle this jerkass in a labcoat in the same way.

You give him a thin smile, one that barely reaches your eyes, before you ask him if the reason he's in such a bad mood is from all the masturbating he's doing. With the porn you brought him, you mean.

Midori, seemingly having flinched in advance for the sudden act of violence that you've apparently decided against, slowly opens her eyes, before looking at you and then at Souji. As if unbelieving that the young man was still standing, and you not shooting off his kneecaps or something.

". . ." Souji scowls at you in stony silence, before letting out a derisive snort as he punches the call button for the elevator. The huge metal doors sliding open with the noise of metal grating against metal, and you follow him in, Midori at your heels. A couple of button presses and ID authorization, and you're well on your way back to the surface, machinery grinding underneath your feet as you are brought slowly up from the subterranean levels.

Souji is...strangely quiet during this elevator ride, for some reason. A bit disappointing, as you were expecting a return volley. Not that you don't mind giving this snide verbal sparring thing a break, of course. You're much more acquainted with the more direct forms of conflict.

"...Thank you for taking care of Misaka." You hear the young man say this as he sighs. "I heard from Kyuubey how she considers you her big sister. Using her as a sniper in a retirement mission notwithstanding, I'm glad someone's looking out for her in that hick town." He then turns to look at you, the smirk gone from his face. "We started off on the wrong foot, and that's fine. We're not here to make friends. But I was brought up to give thanks where it's due, and you deserve it as far as my little sister is concerned."

You blink at this, and nod after a moment. Not that he really needed to thank you, of course. If anything, it's Misaka who's been taking care of you, not the other way around. Still, maybe there's something more to this guy--

I get the impression that Mami approves of our effort to become a better person and that seeing us try makes her happy.

Perhaps Mami rewarding us with pancakes when we do good is the easiest road to redemption. It's like us patting Misaka on the head and telling her she's a good girl; positive reinforcement. But in the case of Mami and Chiaki: it's pancakes and hugs.

He blinks at your question, before chuckling to himself, shaking his head as he does so. "What, you have to ask about that? You, of all people, want to ask about what you did to Valnikov Kharn's career?"

He turns to look at you, as if trying to see whether or not you're joking - and you're pretty sure you're not. You frown, your eyes narrowing behind your glasses, and you ask your question again. Never could tell with these science-faring types.

"Wow. You...you don't really know, do you? Didn't Kyuubey tell you--no, no. Of course he wouldn't have told you. Probably didn't want his next Warmaster feeling guilty and shit." He raises his hands in mock surrender. "Nevermind, I get it. But really, if you want to know? You should probably ask Kharn herself. Ask her just how you ruined her life and had her sent here, in the middle of fucking nowhere."

The smirk falls from his face as he glares at you with a markedly increased amount of venom than he did when you greeted him with tawdry store-bought pornography.

There it is, then. The reason for all this nonsense. You were wondering if you were just that bad with meeting new people, or if there was some underlying explanation to all the vitriol.

You don't have any reply, other than feeling...what? Guilt? Of course, you're guilty. Kharn has been nothing but nice to you ever since you got here, and she seems to genuinely like you, even at your worst. If what Souji is saying is true, then you've done something horrible to her, enough that her way of life was upset and she got shipped off to this Disney On Ice shithole extravaganza. Her career as Warmaster, down the drain because of you.

I drink it if I go out drinking
If you get decent to good quality stuff it is absolutely beautiful

The whiskey needs to be good quality or it is horrible but if it is good and mixed right you get this great combination of the whiskey flavor and this little bit of sweetness as an aftertaste that is great..

The cheapest one that I find drinkable is Wild Turkey American Honey (actually capitalized like that for the marketing) but there are much better out there

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 08/25/12(Sat)22:57 No.20475337

You are a Magical Girl, and until a few moments ago, you had believed that the worst thing about your rather irritating case of selective amnesia was forgetting your own name. Granted, you've gotten over that, and the name you picked for yourself in the few seconds after you've woken up does seem quite the improvement. You could have chosen much more poorly.

Well, Murderface doesn't really count.

You're pretty sure you never came up with that.

>> ☐ Deculture 08/25/12(Sat)22:58 No.20475341

>>20475337

That aside, though, you're not too sure what you think about the latest revelation of just how much of a horrific excuse for a human being you are.

Said revelation was so smugly and snidely provided by a white-haired, sharp-faced young man in a labcoat, pointedly standing at the other side of the elevator platform currently bringing you, him and your subordinate back up to the surface of a rather overtly-fortified Research and Development facility in Kamchatka, Siberia.

Said young man being the director of this very facility, and you suspect, the beau of your very attractive and very capable former partner, who in turn - because of some PR disaster you were directly and solely responsible for, in your recent and freshly-forgotten past - was stricken from the active duty roster and exiled here, away from the city, away from her calling.

Now, you're not too sure what it was exactly you did.

But you're sure, at least, that it was horrible enough that your former partner had been made to suffer for it. Stripped of her rank, her very purpose, her very reason of existence. As a Magical Girl yourself, with your life measured in mere moments every time you venture out on a sanctioned assignment - one tends to hold on to such things with a death grip, a drowning man's desperate clawing at flotsam. It is all that is ever left for you, and you cannot imagine having it taken away along with everything else that you've lost.

Just how much have you forgotten? You have forgotten Kharn's existence in your life - six months' worth of memories, gone, just like that. A half-year blank, along with the other gaps in your mind. How can you conveniently forget a friend, after you've all but reduced them to a...a glorified secretary?

>>20475341

Your irritation at your unreliable memory - and the hot, cloying flush of guilt - is only eclipsed by your confusion.

Confusion from the fact that Kharn did not kill you the moment she saw you step down from the chinook's embarkation ramp.

It would have been the very least that you deserved.

You would have done exactly the same. Hell, you probably wouldn't have waited for the damn chinook to land.

Instead, she's greeted you like a long-lost friend. Comrade, she called you. Brought you into the prison she'd been exiled to, gave you lodgings. Gave you food, drink, whatever you needed. Treated you with nothing but a cheerful, polite familiarity and the warmth you've rarely seen coming from anyone else other than your personal goddess of luck and victory.

For someone referred to the Betrayer - for someone who looked like a finely-tuned killing machine than anything else - Kharn seemed to have forgiven you for whatever you've done to her. Forgiven you for ruining her.

You're not too sure why, but she did.

Whatever it is you've done to Valnikov Kharn, you are at least sure that you will never forgive yourself for it.

The rest of the trip resumes in silence - and it feels like an eternity before the grated steel platform underneath your feet rumbles to a halt, various machinery clanking and grinding around you as the heavy doors in front slide open. You squint slightly as the dimly-lit darkness of the elevator is banished by the remaining hours of sunlight reflecting off a snow-buried world it's opened to - and Midori, who is now holding your hand, shivers by your side as she pulls her own jacket tighter around her with her other.

With Souji well out in front - he didn't wait until the doors themselves were fully opened, seemingly loathe to spend another moment in the elevator with you - you follow him out to the base' concrete courtyard.

The bear-hunting, you gather, is being taken very seriously. Quite a few of the winter camo-garbed soldiers stationed around the base are milling about in their gear, some talking rather boisterously with each other while sipping from steaming mugs. Quite a few are gathered around a rather massive tracked vehicle - practically a flat-bed truck on treads - and they are arguing in hushed tones as they crouch over the currently-exposed engine.

Most, if not all of them, seem to be sneaking glances at the very center of the courtyard - where the object of your guilt, Kharn, is loudly and rather feverishly arguing with a jacket-clad Misaka, your arms dealer curiously without her stuffed Terminator toy.

>>20475379

You figure the reason for this is that the real version - that is, the nine-foot tall walking tusked monstrosity with spikes all over - is standing ready beside her, his previously-detached right arm now in the process of being reattached. Tools of varying complexity and outright outlandishness are spread out in an olive drab tarp beside Tiny Pete's massive feet - and it's then that you only see that some of the details in the huge robot's armor is in fact bronze reliefs of screaming demonic faces.

Whoever had built Tiny Pete had quite the sense of taste.

You remove your gaze from a particularly metal relief of a horned god sitting on top of a throne of skulls and focus it on Kharn. Your former partner has also changed her attire - that is, the half-worn cardigan removed fully, with a brown leather hunting jacket worn loosely over her rather curve-accentuating blouse. She also has what looks like the M91/30 variant of a Mosin Nagant slung over her shoulder, carrying it with an almost negligent familiarity.

Both her and Misaka seem to be rather snippy about something, snapping at each other in clipped, venomous Russian. You can faintly catch some terms here and there - trunking, servos and other things - but besides that, they may as well have been fighting over just how much more spikes to add to Tiny Pete's frame. During a particularly-heated exchange, Misaka lifts off her goggles to snap at the taller woman, brandishing a glowing welding torch at Kharn's direction - the latter merely repeating just what she'd said a moment later, in an obviously tense tone.

>>20475394

Souji shakes his head at this, and says something in the local language, his rough voice carrying over the chatter. Both girls look up at him, and you immediately see relief blossom in Kharn's face while a scowling disapproval comes over Misaka's. Misaka is quick to disengage from your former partner as she quickly finishes up with Tiny Pete's arm - before stomping over to her older brother and giving him a solid kick in the shin.

This sends Souji hopping on one foot, grasping his injured shin with the other, and some of the gathered soldiers laugh and jeer at this. More angry russian is spat as Misaka gesticulates wildly, pointing at Kharn, then at Souji, and then crossing her arms together.

"Looks like family trouble, Matsuda-sempai," Midori murmurs beside you, and you can't help but agree. You've decided to stay put a few meters away from them. It wouldn't really do to interrupt something like this.

Souji's attempt for a placating, apologetic tone lasts only for a few moments before he is now in a shouting match with Misaka - and Kharn is worriedly squeezing his arm, murmuring something in a rather contrite tone. A couple more moments of this, and it's then that the Director pulls his arm from Kharn's grasp, throwing both his hands into the air and then turning on his heel to stalk back into the base.

"Don't let her get hurt." He grumbles underneath his breath, his lab coat unfurling behind him as he passes you by.

You murmur to the affirmative, glancing at his retreating back before turning to look at the remains of your little party.

This bear hunting trip is off to a barely-auspicious start.

Well, at least both Kharn and Misaka seem to brighten up as they finally see you. Misaka in particular breaks into a run after exlaiming your name, all smiles, and she nearly tackles you into the snow-covered ground as both you and Midori make your approach.

Kharn offers you a warm smile, her crimson-pinned black eyes glowing from behind her glasses. "Ah, comrade Murderface. I trust your sleep was a peaceful one? I heard from Midori that you seemed to be having a nightmare of some sort. Is everything alright?"

Well, yes, of course. You just dreamed about her tearing you apart with a giant chainsaw, after all.

How do you respond?

You manage to work up a small smile of your own, as strange as it feels to do so, before you reply. It must have been something you drank - or didn't drink - and it was nothing really worth worrying about, much less bringing up in conversation. You say this as you reach down and pat Misaka's head, her face still buried in the bulk of your jacket, her arms tight around you. It doesn't feel like she's crying, but with how the jacket itself is thick, you can't be too sure.

You give her another pat on the head just to be sure, and rest your hand there. Physical contact had always been a balm to Misaka's tantrums, but you get the hint that there's more to this than just her usual antics.

"Ah, I see. This I understand." Kharn says after a moment, her smile widening. "And you are still as secretive as ever. Always holding your cards close to chest, even if friends only want a small peek to find out which card to palm to you, eh?" She shakes her head, her long black hair swaying with the motion. "It is good to see that you still have your wits about you, but I would like this time and place for you to be able to relax even a little bit, I think." Its' then that her smile turns into a rather cheeky sort. "Even if you, ah, have been relaxing enough to sleep in the same room as your subordinate."

Midori opens her mouth to indignantly reply, her cheeks crimsoning, before you nudge her into silence with an elbow to her side. Kharn is clearly just ribbing the both of you, after all. If there's anyone who you can trust to not jump at conclusions right away, it's Kharn, making that little jab purely jest and nothing else.

You let Kharn amuse herself before you ask her about the plans for this hunt.

"Ah, yes, of course." Kharn nods, before gesturing with one of her clawed hands towards the massive tracked vehicle that is now being refueled, the smell of diesel stinging your nose. "We will be using this to get to the hunting grounds, which is a few kilometers to the north, into the mountains. I have already sent an advance party to get the horde's blood riled up, as it is. This way, we do not have to wait for the bait to work before we can start killing."

It's a bit amusing how she uses 'killing' instead of 'hunting'. An interesting personality quirk, for someone with black skeletal claws for fingers and metal-plated limbs for legs and feet.

"We will be escorted by a ten-man team - just in case we are overwhelmed, or if we need more bait to work with-" This part she makes it a point to say quite loudly, bringing some hooting from nearby soldiers. "-and after we have killed enough, we will be taking the same route back, with our quarry, on the same vehicle. Or before sunset arrives, whichever comes first." KHarn nods again, with finality. "That is all, I am thinking, unless I am missing something...?" Her sentence ends with a querying note, and it's then that Misaka slowly disengages from you, her eyes slightly red. She scowls up at Kharn, before turning back to you, all smiles once more.

"Tiny Pete will be coming along, too." Misaka says, her voice slightly hoarse, probably from all the yelling earlier. "This one needs to make sure that repairs are taking, and combat routines are uncompromised." She must have seen the look of concern on your face that she blinks up at you, before pulling her goggles down to hide her eyes.

"A-anyway, Murderface, it is okay, isn't it? Misaka can bring along Tiny Pete to your bear hunt?" Three slits of bright green light encased in olive drab resin looks up at you pleadingly. "B-big Brother said that it was supposed to be for you, so...Misaka has to ask if it is okay..."

You blink at this, and Kharn stares pointedly at you before shrugging. Even Tiny Pete, with his tusked helm and crimson eye lenses, is looking at you with expectation. The other troops are looking as well, some of them looking at Tiny Pete with unabashed astonishment and excitement. Boys astonished at seeing a walking robot, even though you're positive that they have bigger ones walking around here somewhere.

What do you reply?

[]Sure, Tiny Pete can come. As long as he piledrives one of the bears for me.

>"Ah, I see. This I understand." Kharn says after a moment, her smile widening. “And you are still as secretive as ever. Always holding your cards close to chest, even if friends only want a small peek to find out which card to palm to you, eh?"

It was just a dream, albeit a disturbing one. And probably one that will make us ask that Misaka and Midori, and others whore are not combat specialists, stay far away during the Gold Weapon training.
Also. You know if Souji has been told about us... I wonder why he's consistently insulted or been hostile to us.

I mean, Kharn was surprised that we didn't shoot his knees out just when he gave his "I'm not impressed" first impression.

You smile down at your arms dealer - and despite her strangely-wrought goggles covering half her face, Misaka has never looked more like the child she was. It's easy enough to forget that, considering here ease of handling a rifle twice as long as she is tall, and that she had single-handedly brought something like Tiny Pete to lumbering, demon-smashing life. But she is still a child, a little sister you've never hand.

You ruffle her hair and tell her that yes, Tiny Pete can come along. But only if he performs certain wrestling maneuvers on any bears he comes across during the hunt.

Misaka all but positively beams at this, whooping before jumping up and throwing her arms around your neck in an embrace. "Thank you, Murderface! Misaka will not forget very kind, very pretty, and much BETTER big sister Murderface!" Misaka turns around to glare at Kharn, goggle-slits flaring, and the taller woman blinks at this, looking rather mollified. The arms dealer sticks her tongue at your former partner, before letting go and then fussing around Tiny Pete once more.

You glance towards the huge, walking monstrosity - and you have the strangest feeling that he's looking right back at you. You give it a nod, and after a moment, it nods back, courteously, before turning around to face Misaka as she continues to double-check his systems.

Kharn manages to work up another smile before shaking her head. "Now, this one is surprising. Murderface, you...you will make a good mother, someday. But most likely not right now, as you spoil children far too much." She laughs, slightly, ignoring Misaka grumbling at her from behind Tiny Pete's bulk. "But there is at least a tender side of you. At least you have not forgotten that."

I didn't think we HAD a tender side.

Really, the whole amnesia thing felt like that moment when the Grinch suddenly feels his heart grow 10 sizes and helps save Christmas.

Some of the stuff we've done were examples of incredible personal restraint and tolerance -- such as not shooting Sayaka in the face when literally the first thing she did to us was try to stab us in the back at Mami's house, and then blame us for not having gotten here sooner. (Did she also object to our busting in through the door into the room Mami was fighting the Witch? I can't recall if that happened or not.)

Also, when we had every reason to suspect Sayaka of betrayal (the "bluebird") and being the one responsible for Mami being kidnapped by Kirika. And when Sayaka called it our fault that we didn't do this properly, further blaming us. We had a Golden Weapon in our hand at that time, too. And we ended up sparing her and asking for a truce.

I half-suspect that Sayaka's intention in suggesting to Mami that they warn Kirika, was because Sayaka was hoping that Kirika and Murderface would end up killing each other. So that "You didn't do it properly, Murderface!" comment of her's felt REALLY obnoxious.

Really, how has Sayaka not provoked us to murder her, or even shoot her, but ended up with a picture of Butler!Kyoko we had?

And what is it with stupid people constantly mocking or screwing with somebody who had long held a reputation for psychopathy and hyperviolence?

Is it some strange game of Chicken played with Darwin Awards or something?

Tender side. Right. Your tender side usually comes up only to shooting someone in the kneecaps because you don't feel like shooting them in the face. Mostly for convenience's sake than anything else, really.

But as it was, you had no reason to refuse - Misaka had saved your life twice, after all, if you count her providing you with Tiny Pete at your last mission. It'd be quite petty of you to refuse.

"Understandable." Your former partner smiles, nodding. "Now, ah, let us get you kitted out, yes?" She looks you up and down, her crimson-pinned eyes narrowing at your heels. "...Oh, very stylish, Murderface, but I think you will have difficulty treading snow with those, hmm? Come, let Midori attend to Misaka for a while, and let us get you armed and ready for this murder-make. It would be remiss of me to simply let you face the horde without proper gear, after all."

Horde. Why is she calling a bunch of bears a 'horde'? Why would a bunch of fat, meandering piles of fur qualify for such a descriptor?

You ask her this before nodding at Midori, who give you a smile and quickly acquiesces, moving over to Misaka's side but not before bumping fists with Tiny Pete, the terminator returning the gesture. The snow crunches underneath your feet as Kharn leads you around the tracked vehicle, where a table full of high-caliber rifles and ammunition is set up. This, along with equipment that you would expect from anything OTHER than a simple bear hunt, makes you wonder just what sort of bears you'd be facing.

Because, grenades. And C4. And other things you only see in an operator kit.

What are you hunting, a goddamn crime organization made up of bears? A bear mafia?

After a moment's consideration, you pick up the M91/30 Mosin Nagant, mirroring Kharn's choice of rifle, and she is visibly pleased at this. "Ah, an excellent choice, comrade Murderface! I was expecting you to pick this one--" she reaches down to gently place the curved tips of her claws on the bloody stock. "--because, ah, this is the most prudent choice for this hunt. A proper elephant gun, a large caliber that can topple even the biggest bear in this parts with one shot. But where is the challenge there?"

She gives the massive rifle a pat. "This is also Souji's own hunting rifle. As you can see, it is a bit...unused, but I have made sure to maintain it always." Kharn stifles a giggle. "The bloodstains may look rather legendary and heroic, but that is when he broke his nose due to the stock breaking his nose. He was holding it wrong, and did not probably brace himself for the recoil." She shakes her head and sighs. "He gave up hunting after that, which is a pity. He is just as good as his sister in marksmanship, if not better."

You stifle a smile yourself as you sling your new rifle over your shoulder.

If that's the case, then, what does Souji do for amusement here, besides his research?

At that question, your former partner crimsons. "W-well, I...I believe he reads books, a lot. Long, dry books that make you fall aslep at the first page." It's then that she smiles, again. "A-and going on internet forums and proving people wrong. Sometimes he takes a very long time, enough that I have to drag him to bed."

Right. That sounds like something he'd do, the basement-dwelling nerd.

Besides the rifle, Kharn instructs you to take a box of soft-point rounds, amounting to around 50 shots - as well as a headset, tuned to the general frequency. You load five rounds into the scopeless rifle, place the remainder in your inventory, and pull the headset on.

It's at this point that you decide to rack your shield. The rifle's handy, but you'd like something to rely on just in case crowd control became an issue. Sure, you have the Golden Desert Eagle already in your inventory, but...you'd rather not rely on it until your treatment, whatever that was. Your nightmare might have very well been a warning, and one you decide to follow.

What comes out is...a rather oversized pistol that's a bit blockier than most. Unlike the golden, finely-wrought elegance of your golden desert eagle, you get this...sharply-angled, black stubbed monstrosity of a pistol, with a curved magazine jutting out angrily in front of the grip. The polished metal surface is covered with what looks like scripture, written in tiny acid-etched letters - at least, the surfaces not bearing ornate decorations of skulls, eagles, and skulls with eagle wings.

You turn the beastly firearm around in your ands, before pressing what looks the most like a magazine release, and the heavy curved magazine slides away into your other hand. The loaded rounds are not, in any way, recognizable - looking less like bullets and more...miniature rockets.

You shrug at this, before replacing the magazine with a rather satisfying crunch, and then stashing the gun in your inventory. At least it didn't turn out to be another golden weapon. You'd like to enjoy killing bears without worrying about going crazy, this time.

"Have all you need, then, Murderface?" Kharn asks, and you nod before taking another headset for Midori. "If that is the case, then I will have these placed back in the armory. After which I will introduce you to the troops - it is time the realized who they answer to, now."

...Wait. Introduce you to these soldiers? But you're still not Warmaster, not officially! You're still in training!

"Nonsense. In training, yes, but also a Warmaster. The rank itself is official even when you are still learning to be one." Kharn grins claps you on the shoulder, and you could feel the brutal tips of her claws press lightly against your skin through your clothes. "Do not be so shy, Murderface. Relish your rank. Being Warmaster is to be in rarified air - breathe now and breathe deep, for you do not know when you will not be able to, any longer."

...Kharn is the only person you know that can sound reassuring and ominous at the same time.

"Ahahaha! Father has always said it is my best talent!"

After a few more moments of wondering if you should really pack as much C4 as you could into your inventory, it's then that you make your way back to the other three participants in this little hunt - and Midori smiles her thanks as you toss her the headset. She puts it on, while seemingly taking in your new look.

"Nice gear, sempai." The green-haired girl remarks, grinning. "You should probably look into making that your signature weapon, sempai. You kinda look cool with a rifle."

Cool, huh? Maybe you should. Mami's rifles have never failed to add to her style, giving her that extra, uneeded but definitely essential last bit of class whenever she fights.

You stare silently at your subordinate, before making a note about teaching her to shoot today. Maybe a few shots with your supervision. With your work, she would need to be able to shoot just in case you yourself are unable to.

It's then that Midori notices you staring that she herself colors slightly. "W-what is it, sempai? Is there something on my face?"

You blink, and then shake your head. You ask her if she needs anything else, and she shakes her head, holding up her own smartphone.

"Got what I need right here, sempai. I don't really go for guns, so I'll just be taking pictures. Well, at least until the shooting starts, anyway. I don't think I can look at fluffy bears being reduced to hamburger."

There's...really not much else to take photographs of besides the snow and such, but you leave her to her devices. You glance towards Misaka and Tiny Pete - and your arms dealer gives you a thumbs up as she slaps the ceramite armor of the Terminator's right arm, which seems to be finally fixed and ready for action, by the way its massive fingers are easily flexing and crunching into a fist.

You turn to Kharn, and you confirm that your team is ready. She nods at this, before placing a clawed hand on your shoulder and loudly clearing her throat.

The rabble of the soldiers descend into silence, and for a moment, there is no sound except for the wind howling.

"Soldiers of Kamchatka," Kharn begisn to address the soldiers, speaking no louder than her usual volume of speaking, and yet it carries easily throughout the entire courtyard. "Allow me to present Chiaki Matsuda, or as I refer and fondly remember her as, Murderface. She is the Officio's current Warmaster - a rank I once held, but no longer."

She pauses for a moment before continuing. "This is not any issue with me, for Murderface here, dearest of all my friends, is much more suited to the role than I will ever be. Please, recognize her now as the highest ranking officer present! Her authority is my authority, and present yourself with the utmost respect in the duration of her stay. Most importantly, conduct yourselves as befitting of soldiers, especially during this hunt. She is joining us, here, along with her own aide and the younger sister of our Director. Try not to make a mockery out of yourselves in their view."

A smile curls Kharn's soft, unpainted lips as the men start to laugh.

"Very well, this is not our first hunt. Remember, never venture out alone, make sure your quarry is suitably dead before even thinking of approaching it..." And it's then that your former partner's smile grows wider. "And if I hear a single bear joke out of anyone, I will kill them with my bear hands."

Even more laughter, this time, and Midori joins in, before clapping a hand over her mouth and looking rather embarrassed.

"Then those chosen to participate in the hunt, let us not waste any more time. The rest shall keep watch, and wait for us to bring home dinner." She claps her unnatural hands, once, the slap of flesh edged with metal slapping together. "You have your orders. Move."

Letting out a sigh, Kharn turns toward you, a soft smile on her face.

"It will be nice to kill things with you again, comrade Murderface. But, ah, you have been keeping something from me, are you not?" Her crimson-pinned eyes gleam from behind her glasses. "Come on, you can tell Kharn. Let us reveal our feelings before we bond in the act of murder."

Chiaki, relationships, love. Are you trying to make me snicker?

Our girl here is a broken shell of a human being who maintains a facade of sanity through force of will, pills and metric fucktons of alcohol.

If someone, other than our angel of pancakes and the maiden of the armory, touched us in an affectionate manner we'd freak out. We've been trying to get Chiaki on track towards being a better human being, but she is still not emotionally capable of handling a relationship.

Not mandatory, but highly recommended. Sayaka in PMMM was straight and ended up killing three people, one of them being Kyouko.
Meaning lesbian magical girls are often more emotionally stable than straight ones. I don't know if this is true of all magical girls.

One might say that while lesbianism isn't mandatory, such relationships might be a bit more successful in some ways. There are no magical guys, so your partner would invariably be a normal person, and would have a harder time understanding the horrors and stresses of such a job.

Other magical girls, on the other hand, know what you're going through, and it's easier to comfort one another and not expect too much.

On the other hand, if one of them dies, their partner is probably going to go berserk and/or witch out pretty quickly.

As the massive treaded truck rumbles to life and begins to slowly make its way out of the base, some of the soldiers - and Tiny Pete - making to follow it on foot - it's then that you reach up with both hands to lower your headset, pulling the microphone away from your lips. Looking up at your former partner, whose wide, curiously-hued eyes are considering you with equal amounts of kind patience and childlike curiosity.

You clear your throat, breathe deeply, and ask her why.

Wincing inwardly at how weak - how vulnerable - your voice sounds as it trembles with every word.

Why? Why does she treat you like a friend, like a comrade, welcoming you with open arms? With her knowing full well that you are the reason why she has been exiled here, away from her friends, her life in Mitakihara?

Why does she treat you like this, a broken thing that only on the rarest occasions resemble a proper person - what have you done to be treated with so much kindness despite your horrific betrayal? Why does she not hate you, despise you, despite having all the right reasons to?

What did you do?

What did you do to deserve someone like her?

Kharn is silent as she looks at you, a stunned expression on her face. A moment, and it's then that she reaches out with her own brutal hands - and you inwardly flinch at seeing both brutally-clawed, unnaturally-elongated fingers come nearer.

You close your eyes as you feel them rest on your shoulders. You open them again to see Kharn smile down at you.

"To see you like this, Murderface, it convinces me that you have truly forgotten. But you did not wish to forget. Something has made you, even when you have held onto your memories like a dying soldier clings to his gun."

Kharn leans in close, and you feel cool, soft lips press upon your forehead in a kiss.

"Perhaps, back then, it would have mattered. It does not matter now. I have long accepted my fate, and wear it as armor. My title as my weapon. Whatever had happened back then is history. If you have forgotten it - then why should I remember?" She draws back to look at you, and shakes your shoulders slightly. "All I will hold onto, Murderface, is how I enjoyed being your partner. You and our dearly departed mutual friend."

You blink at this. You...had forgotten someone else? Someone...who had already died?

Kharn nods after a moment. "It is better to find out now, than later, eh? Ah, but do not worry, she died a peaceful death. Painless. I made sure of it." She taps both your shoulders. "But we should not speak of it, not right now. Later, perhaps, when our bellies are full of vodka and our hearts brimming of regret. Then, I will tell you what I can. For now, we hunt."

You nod numbly at this. You have...forgotten too much. Simply too much.

It's then that you shriek and jump forward as you feel Kharn's cold, steel hands give you a slap on the behind.

I'm not saying that we forget about our past or run from it, just that we need to move forward. We should try to make amends for what we've done, but we shouldn't beat ourselves down with them. We know that we were a less than likeable person in the past, but that shouldn't stop us from becoming somebody new.

From what I understand, Kharn sees this as well. She sees that we are gradually becoming a different, better person. And in order to actually get better Chiaki needs to see that about herself. She needs to realize that while she has done terrible things, she is becoming a different person.

A theory I propose says that Homura suffered an extremely traumatic moment that shut down, but didn't destroy, her Soul Gem. Something related to Faust/Madoka.
A 'blank', or a template if wou will, took over it and, by extension, her body, which eventually shaped itself into Murderface.
Then a similar, but not as traumatic event happened, something related to Charlotte. When our Soul Gem was restarted then, the second blank that took over had most of Murderface's quirks and personality, but not her memory.

And somewhere behind all those system resets, lies actual Homura.

Homura has her gem and shield on her left arm. Since thread 1, Chiaki has been described as having hers on her right arm. When Chiaki's arm got lopped off in the fight against Kirika, Kyubey temporarily moved the gem to her left arm. Then when they regenerated the arm, they moved them back to the right arm.

So... Chiaki is like some Homura mirror image with a drinking problem, bad eyesight, no social skills and guilt issues.

Being Meguca is suffering.

So what if Madoka is the Culexus.

And Kharn witnessed our mutual killing fest.
And Chiaki simply trauma-forgot the incident?
Didn't we see Madoka's picture in QB's room?

And It required so much of the cover-up, Kharn was titled The Betrayer and sent here?

This doesn't even have any sense, right?

Alright, how about this: Recall that Kharn is keeping our sarcophagus, a coffin in which a mummy is kept.

The Egyptians believed that a mummified body contained three essential spirits. First was the ka, the "double" of a person, who remained in the tomb and required the offerings there. Next was the ba, the "soul", which was free to fly in and out of the tomb. And then was the akh, the "spirit", which had to travel through the Underworld to be judged before passing on to the Afterlife.

Chiaki('s body) is the "double". We need to return to the tomb (i.e., sarcophagus) in order to initiate the whole process of transcending to the Afterlife, which may or may not represent some sort of spiritual interaction with Pinky. The "soul" is our conscious (personality), which has experienced resets because it is not at all bound to the tomb or our other two spirits. The "spirit" is our missing heart, which we must now retrieve in order to truly reach Pinky's plane.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 08/28/12(Tue)08:35 No.20506252

You are a Magical Girl, and you find yourself hunting bears in Siberia, a freshly-loaded M91/30 Mosin Nagant rattling on its strap slung on your shoulder as you do your best to tread snow with somewhat ill-fitting boots.
You'd been having so much trouble with your heels that Kharn finally took pity on you, and gave you the pair she'd been meaning to hand to you but suspiciously forgot.

"Maybe your amnesia is contagious, Murderface," she had said, laughter in her voice after she sees you eat it for the fourth time - your reward for trying to tread the rather unforgiving terrain consisting of hard-packed snow, suddenly ankle-deep snow, and slippery ice. "Perhaps I am catching it, and I am forgetting things! Hahaha!"

For someone whose career - and life - you ruined, and forgot all about it because of your amnesia, Kharn is being a real sport about it. You're not sure why, but hell, you'll take your blessings where you can get them.

You'll just have to ignore the sinking feeling in your stomach that you'll be looking back at this moment with regret, someday.

With the boots, the long trek to the hunting grounds that Kharn promised didn't seem all that long, after all. The massive truck on treads was slow enough that you had opted to tackle the trip on foot; something your former partner seemed more than happy to join you in. Tiny Pete, Misaka's little experiment and your current best spiky buddy, brings up the rear, leaving massive imprints with every lumbering step.

Walking side by side with Kharn, a good solid rifle in your hands and nothing to wait for but tomorrow - it's a quite refreshing experience, revitalizing almost. Perhaps this is why vacations to remote parts of the world are so popular these days - to really relax, to really disconnect from stress is to be placed in a radically-different environment; totally alien from your usual trappings. Not that you'd recommend a trip to Siberia to hunt bears for anybody else, but for someone like you, this seems to be what just the doctor ordered.

You're not even jonesing for the booze as much as you were, earlier. Hell, you haven't even lit a single cigarette since this started!

An almost happy sigh leaves your lips; and you breathe in the chilly, bracing air as you continue to follow the large tracked vehicle rumbling in front of you. You probably don't even mind if you don't get to kill a single bear - that would really just be a bonus. Being out here, in a quiet, snow-covered forest...

...You almost feel like you're home.

"It is nice, isn't it?" You hear Kharn say beside you, her armor-plated feet clanking quietly with every stride as she keeps in lockstep. "Despite the obvious danger, the men relish these hunts because it relaxes them as much as it gets their blood up. Hunting is a slow and methodical sport, and there are chances that we end up not sighting a single horde. But we enjoy it all the same."

She turns slightly towards you, and you catch a gleam in her black, crimson-pinned eyes behind her glasses.

"I would recommend that you take this up as a hobby when you get back home, but, ah, there is really no decent place to hunt in Mitakihara, is there?" Kharn smiles. "Well, unless you count our own hunting parties, back then - which, while I recount fondly, were not exactly...officially sanctioned, if I may be allowed to use euphemisms." The word sounds strange with her accent, but it sounds like a strangely erotic term all the same, rolling off her tongue. "You were quite enthusiastic about them, you know. And you have the leading score, still, at that."

You blink at this. It seems that Kharn is sharing something about the past that you don't remember, and while it sounds positive for the most part, the small amount that her smile had faded seems to signify that it wasn't all...peaches and cream, back then.

I've realised something.
In the anime, Homura was never shown drinking and smoking.
I know the drinking and smoking as added as part of the noir theme, but there is one line that got me thinking.

> "But at the very least, you still remember how to slowly self-destruct. That's something the original was very good at."

This could either mean:

1. This is set post anime, living in a world where your friend has become the worlds unsung martyr despite having spent lifetimes trying to save her is a good case for turning to pills, meds and the bottle.

2. We are silly billy's for trying to fit the anime into this.

Some more speculation:

So far, we've been assuming that Homura (before she got kali-mah'd by Faust) was a good guy. However, the diary entries seem to imply that she was, at the very least, paranoid. And from what I can piece together from what other people have said, there is an actual continuity where Homura kills off Madoka for power.

Perhaps we should take what the diary entries say with a grain of salt? Homura may have been a magical girl of a very 'Practical' nature. Pic related.

Kharn laughs at your comment about the director of the Officio's Research and Development branch, which you've worded with your typical sense of subtlety and tact. "Yes, he does, there is no disagreement between you and me there. But, ah, what will you say if I told you that it is one of his better qualities?"

Her strides, as confident as fluid as always even in the snow, continue to make those strangely-enticing noises - and it's then that you realize how similar they sound to the mechanical action of a firearm's slide being pulled back and being gently released. It's a strange comparison to draw, but there it was.

You shake your head as you digest her response, however. One of his better qualities, she says? Is she keeping track of them, or something?

"...You can say that. I put it to you, you can learn a lot about someone's personality when you spend six months with them in somewhere as remote as this." She gestures with a brutally-clawed hand over the snow-muffled landscape around you. "Working with him has been...an interesting experience. Like desk work. I thought I would never grow accustomed to it, but there it is." Kharn lets out a sigh, her breath leaving her mouth in a small puff of steam in the chilly air.

You idly wonder if you'll turn out the same, too, if in her situation. Kharn's laughter gives it away that you had mistakenly thought aloud.

"You? Desk work? The mere thought of it is inconceivable, Murderface! No, you would probably go insane first!"

Well, I've also been thinking. It keeps being implied that this state of affairs is our, for at least Homura's, fault.

I think that this occurs post anime where Homura unsatisfied with the world that Madoka's sacrifice found tried a way of undoing it.
She somehow got Godoka to create an alternate universe, however the strain of creating a universe was too much even for Godoka. Since the new universe still had the default:
magical girl -> witch rule
Her soul gem shattered and became the oversized grief seed we know today.

But I still don't really understand how killing Godoka's witch is supposed to help things.

The diary entries say she deserves it. And why would they lie to us?

As much as I like Kharn, my paranoia is telling me that this is going to end in some sort of death gauntlet through the hordes as an act of revenge by Kharn, while our gals are held hostage.

You turn to frown at her, but it's then that she hushes you before pointing towards the clearing to your left with a brutally-clawed finger. You turn to look - and it's there that you see what looks like the skeletal remains of a skier impaled on a tree branch, his bright neon clothing now faded and dulled with drying blood. A broken jawbone hangs lopsidely from underneath a crimson skiing cap, as petrified fingers clasp around the jagged stump of a branch jutting out of the former skier's ribcage.

It's to note that it is missing both its legs, and most of its lower torso.

"One of the victims from last month." Kharn murmurs under her breath as she nudges you to continue walking. "We suspect he was a tourist who flew in here by helicopter, looking for fresh skiing spots. See how he is holding onto that which holds him in place, on the tree? The bears placed him there while he was still alive, and it was then that they started feasting on him."

Well. Not exactly standard bear behavior, but it's not like you've done this before. As far as you can remember, anyway.

"In any case." Kharn clears her throat as the both of you continue your trek, Tiny Pete's plodding footfalls behind you an ever present reminder to keep moving. "Souji can be abrasive, but that is simply because he favors honesty and directness to...a pretense of civility. He says it is much easier if we speak only what we mean to speak to the people we do not wish to get along with, to limit interaction and waste less of each other's time."

Kharn abdicated the Warmaster position when she took Chiaki under her wing. However, QB did mention that she only retired to Siberia after her 6-month partnership with Chiaki ended rather badly. As others speculated, this may have something to do with the late Culexis that seemed to be friends with Kharn and Chiaki. Perhaps it was over something that involved her death?

That makes...sense. A surprising amount. You actually understand where he's coming from--

"But I have also told him that there is no excuse for deliberately being an idiot." Kharn adds, as if an afterthought. "Civility may be bothersome, but it is what separates men from the beasts. Manners."

...Yes, of course. Manners. Those are important, too.

A moment of silence passes between the both of you, and it's then that you ask her another question that pops up unbidden in your mind. Well, not really unbidden, as you've been wanting to ask her about it earlier - ever since you saw her arguing rather heatedly with your arms dealer, who you haven't seen as incensed for quite a while. Not even Kirika's little stunt with her prized Chicago Typewriter then had earned such ire.

"Ah. That." Your former partner lapses into silence, before replying with a slight tinge of crimson in her cheeks. "It...it is a personal thing, Murderface. You are the dearest of all my friends, but I do not think that I am at liberty to discuss it." She smiles, awkwardly, apologetically. "I do not think the parties involved will appreciate it if I get other people involved, as well. So, if possible...I would like to conveniently dodge that question. You may ask me anything else, however."

As honest and forthcoming as your former partner is being, you've noticed that she's being a bit closed with certain topics. Topics that somehow involve both the R&D Facility Director and your arms dealer. Of course, you're not as stupid as to miss the obvious implications between her and Souji, but where does Misaka come in? Perhaps there's some sort of tension between them because of what's between Kharn and her older brother? Is she opposed to the relationship in some way, or just not enamored about the entire idea?

Well, whatever it is, you leave it alone. She did ask, and even you know that there are limits to what you share with your friends. It's not like you don't have anything else to talk about, either.

You glance back up at Kharn, who seems to be fiddling with her rifle - her long, brutish fingers slowly working the bolt back and forth a somewhat disturbing, if entrancing sight. You shake your head briefly, before asking her about her glasses - which, as you've noted, is quite similar to yours.

"Ahaha, these? I was wondering when you would ask!" She reaches up with a clawed hand to nudge her glasses up the bridge of her nose, a curious gesture coming from her. "These are yours, in actuality, Murderface! It is last gift you gave to me, before I left!" She smiles, brightly. "You gave them to me because you thought my eyes, they...attract too much attention. As such, glasses with fancy would make them look friendlier!"

Huh. Well. At least the past you had a lick of sense. And it does work - you're sure that anyone else would shit themselves if they got an eyeful of Kharn's peepers in a dark alleyway. The feminine glasses do blunten the effect - somewhat.

Clearly, these are perfectly ordinary Bears. Also, the Truck will be fine - if it wouldn't hold up to the Bear's aggression, they wouldn't have brought it. We should ask about what R&D has been working on - it can only help us.

Maybe it would be a good idea to see if we can get Midori in the shield. We should wrap her soul gem in something first, so it doesn't bump against anything. The weapons dealer should have an idea.

Also, we should totally trust Kharne, without reservation.

>> ☐ Anonymous 08/28/12(Tue)10:28 No.20507003

Putting soul gems in the shield could probably totally cheat the system somehow, especially if you went back in time and started making copies of soul gems.

Well, for one, i think we were keeping Midori's soulgem in the Inventory while she was still The Enemy. Since she hasn't come to us with recurring nightmares of dark, cold, endless fields of guns, i'm going to guess that soulgems don't retain independent memory.

Next, i think trying to cram ourself into our own shield is probably a div/0 error, and at best will render us comatose until someone manages to figure out how to work the shield and gets the soulgem out of it.

Lastly, i don't want to shove an entire person in there solely out of curiosity, because i'm not really sure that it isn't inimical to all life.

You have other questions to ask, of course, but it's then that Kharn holds up a clawed hand as she presses her fingers against her headset's earpiece, eyes narrowing behind her glasses. Ahead of you, the truck has ground to a stop, with some of the soldiers hopping off. Metallic clicks filling the air as they ready their own weapons, worn rifles and firearms being prepared for combat.

Kharn shouts a query in Russian; a hard-bitten soldier with rheumy blue eyes and a savage, jagged scar for a mouth replies quickly and tersely, an AK-47 slung casually across his body. You look towards your former partner for answers - you'd like to know what is happening, at least - and you watch as both Misaka and Midori disembark from the truck as well, running towards you with curious looks on their faces.

"Sempai? What's going on?" Midori asks as she comes up in front of you, one hand carefully holding Misaka's own. "From what I could understand, we weren't supposed to be stopping until after a few more kilometers." She looks up at Kharn, who's still murmuring into her headset. "Did Miss Valnikov say anything?"

You shake your head. You've been waiting for an answer yourself, really. Misaka, on the other hand seems to be studiously ignoring Kharn, instead giving you a look up and down.

"Boots." She says, witheringly. "Murderface in boots is a travesty. Misaka is not amused."

It's boots or broken ankles and faces, really. But you refrain from saying this and simply pet her on the head again, if only to improve her obviously black mood even if just a little bit.

A few more moments of speaking rather tersely to her headset's microphone - as well as snapping out some commands in Russian - that Kharn finally remembers her small group of guests consisting of two magical girls and a rather irate-looking arms dealer. "Ah, forgiveness, Murderface, but there seems to have been a slight issue in our preparations. Our hunting is delayed for a bit."

Kharn shakes her head. "It seems that one of the advance parties has sighted something hunting alongside a couple of hordes. It is...not a bear, that much is for certain. It is something worse than them, otherwise the bears themselves would have torn it apart instead of following it like a leader."

Well. That doesn't sound all that good. Did the advance party get a good look at it? What did they describe it as?

"The advance party was describing it as small in stature and looking like a young girl with fiery-red hair wielding some sort of sword. We lost communication with them after that, apart from their screams." Your former partner is already loading rounds into the action of her Mosin Nagant as she says this, and the rather terse, irritated tone in which she says this presents the implication quite clearly.

Somehow, a Magical Girl had gone berserk. Somewhere all too near the Research and Development base. And whoever she was, she had already done away with a handful of Kharn's men.

I vote we time stop quickly and demand an explanation for this bull shit.

Pinky likes to give us our odds before an encounter with another magical girl. If she says we have a 90% or more chance of dying then we should call back all troops and fall back to the base, where the superior numbers and defences will give us a better edge.

I don't like the idea of being caught in the middle of nowhere, with a small (however skilled) party against one berserk magical girl (who could have more than 1 golden weapon) and multiple hordes of killer bears on her side.

So lets time stop and see what intel we can gather. Being forewarned is being forearmed, and all that.

"I will have to ask you a favor, even if it is much too early in our reunion for me to be doing so, Murderface." Kharn racks the bolt of her rifle forward, chambering the first round, before holding the weapon steady in her grip. "Can I count on your assistance, here? I know, I know, this is exactly what you have come here to avoid, but...think of it as hunting, still, except the prey has changed very slightly." She smiles at you, but then blinks at Midori and Misaka. "Hmm. Maybe, we should have Misaka and your subordinate escorted back to the base, yes? This is no place for them."

Misaka hears that, of course, and snaps back at your former partner in a scathing stream of Russian - which she returns ably enough, although in a more placating tone. Midori seems to have gone completely pale at the news, however, and you take her hand, asking her quietly what's wrong.

Her hand is cold, very cold. Nothing extraordinary in this weather, but it's shivering, too.

"Sempai, I...that description's a bit general, but I think I have an idea who it is." Midori's eyes are wide. "It's...I just don't know what she's doing here. If it's her, I mean, a-and we don't know for sure. Just that..." She looks at Kharn, then back at you. "Sempai, I want to come with you. You're going with Miss Valnikov, right? Take me with you. I need to see if she's who I think she is."

I was one of the votes for taking Midori, but I think I agree with anon.

This stinks. This well and truly stinks of a set-up. Magical girls do not appear out of nowhere. Whoever is behind it, even if it's just Pinky playing games, has set this up for an ambush. We've walked into ambushes before and we barely survived. We should pull back to a location of our choosing to fight.

I know people won't like me raising it, but Kharn could have planned this. Just because we don't think she'll kill us doesn't mean she won't try and take the Golden DEagle. We need to watch the girls. She may be cautious about our time stop, but we get separated from them and she's got us over a barrel.

The problem is that Pinky doesn't seem totally set on helping us stay alive. We went to her once before for help, with extreme reluctance. And that was a mixed blessing because part of helping us involved giving us the golden desert eagle in the first place.

Seriously, don't forget the Faust parallels are here for a REASON.

Just want to remind everyone that in the description of the base when we first arrived, Deculture mentioned huge silhouettes that looked like Titans patrolling it's perimeter.

So, yeah, if we want to fall back and try to get aid from one of those (or any of the troops) in that heavily armed military base, there's always that.

Seriously, people here are forgetting that Pinky may be kind of weirdly adorable, but she's not our happy fun dumb anime waifu who we can trick into sicking on whatever threat we have at a whim. It was with great reluctance that we asked for her help once before, and that ended up biting us in the ass for sure.

Either A: She'll laugh us off for asking for help against something where we don't entirely seem to need it as badly as we did before(because we were literally rendered comatose, we had no choice), or B: She'll gladly help us.. And we'll be stuck with another golden weapon at best, or losing a big chunk of our humanity or some other precious thing or somesuch at worst.

"S-someone from the Pleiades Saints, Sempai. Mirai Wakaba." Midori hesitantly says the word, as if loathe to give reality to her worst fears by vocalizing them. "I...I hope it's not her, but that particular description, a-and with bears involved..." She shakes her head. "She's...her gimmick is that she summons bears, sempai. The sword thing she uses really rarely, because she doesn't like violence. She only uses it when she's really, really angry..."

You blink at this. If she's really from the Pleiades Saints, then why is she bothered about it, you ask? If you remember, they never got along well with Midori, treating the Callidus like so much chopped liver. Why the concern now, then?

"S-sempai, I..." Your subordinate glances at Kharn, who blinks in slight confusion, before turning back to you. "Mirai...Mirai-san, out of uniform, w-was..." Midori shakes her head vehemently. "--IS a friend of mine, sempai. Tthe only one who talked to me outside of assignments, only one who approached me and asked me how I was from time to time. She even made me a hand-sewn teddybear, Sempai." She grabs your hand, and you feel how cold hers are once more. "Let me come with you. She's the only friend in the world I have except for you, sempai. Please."

...Funny. You remember something EXACTLY like this happening. Except that one involved a certain brown-haired idol. That didn't turn out very well, even if it did end in your favor. Somewhat.

What are the odds, then, that this would turn out the same? Or worse?

How do you respond?

We we beat her into unconsciousness if we have to. Our allies are only to shoot bears coming at us or maybe cover us a little if she beats our ass. This is Noir, and if my Noir reading has told me anything, it's that fights can go one sided on a dime.

We probably should hightail it back to Base. Lots of firepower back there and it'll lead backing to our words. She'll be less likely to hurt ANY of us, Midori, Kharn, Misaka, whoever.

If we can't do that, for, say, too far away, or the secret should remain a secret, then we better prepare. She seems to be hankering for death, and is using her sword, which Midori told us is when she's angry. We should attempt to calm her down first, using Midori, who should be covered. She shouldn't be allowed to do anything unnecessary and dangerous beyond the expected.

If everything goes pear shaped, we need to keep Midori from dying and keep this PM and her bear mafia at bay.

You let out a sigh as you shift your right arm slightly so as to get a good look at your Shield. It's clicking a bit erratically, but other than that it's still its battle-damaged self, and the cold is making frost form on its rim.

You play with the idea of racking it an entire 180 degrees, initiating your Time Stop and making Pinky materialize out here, in the wilderness - before hauling off and slapping her in the face. Chastising her for daring to interrupt your hunting trip, something you desperately needed to unwind with. How can you pick up after her if she forces you to remain an overworked and overwound Magical Girl? Who does she expect to collect her golden crap? Midori? Or maybe Sayaka? Whoever's just the teensiest bit crazier than you?

You smile slightly as you play with the idea, and nothing more. Of course, that's crazy. That's suicide. For all her honeyed words and murmured declarations of love, she's all but admitted that your dreams involving her have come true. And you know she'll do it again the moment you let her.

"You're nothing but trouble to me." You hear yourself murmur underneath your breath as you stare into the clicking gears at the middle of your shield. You look up at Midori's puzzled, expectant face, before finally replying to her - that yes, she'll be able to come, but she has to face the reality that her friend has been sent to kill you - or her.

It's as predictable Incubator behavior as it can get, really. Incubators are, after all, notoriously jealous creatures - if it finds out that a Magical Girl under its employ had gone rogue or went to the other side, it will immediately deploy resources in order to destroy that traitorous Magical Girl. No matter where she was. And the method of execution would be personal - through another Magical Girl, hopefully someone who at least is involved with the traitor at one point or another.

Kirika had been proof enough of that.

Midori nods after a moment. "I...I accept that, Sempai. R-really, I do." She seems to hesitate for a split second, before nodding fiercely, a set expression in her face as she looks back at your eyes. "I...I've dreaded something like this happening ever since I came over to your side, Sempai, and it's happening now. I have to deal with it." She draws in a shuddering breath, and lets it out just as shakily.

"A-and as attractive a prospect it is for me to just hide from it, I...I have to be there. If we're going to have to kill Mirai-san, sempai, then I want to be there to say goodbye and...and take responsibility." She nods again.

You stare at her for a moment, before nodding. She's...she certainly seems to be adjusting to this sort of thing very well. A bit too easily, for someone who'd just been told that they'd have to watch their best friend die, but then again, Midori's shown a rather strong sense of pragmatism, even with her...strange fantasies. If anything, she was able to seperate her work from her life, and that was a good sign.

Anyway, fuck. We're probably the Kazumi to Homuhomu's whatever that bitch's name is so it stands to reason we'd have to fight a Saint.

[X] Tell Midori she can come along, but out of sight and cloaked. Bring Misaka as sniper and Pete as watch, Midori cloaks all of them. If Kharn argues, bring up Kirika and tell her we wouldn't be here today if it weren't for Misaka.

Tell Kharn to take a company of men and swing around Mirai's six; we're setting up a pincer and we need to do something about those damned bears. Tell her we are going to be vanguard and try to talk Mirai off the ledge.

If Mirai goes bearserk, we timestop, chew out Pinky and shoot to cripple. If we rack the Golden DEagle, we go back and discipline Pinky. Verbally, that is. She may be evil, but she's still Madoka and Madoka's kind of a punk.

Kharn cuts in from the side, her armored legs clanking as she pats the snow off the jagged plates. She nods towards Midori. "She is coming with us? If so, I will have her armed. But Misaka..." Your former partner glances back at your arms dealer, who is fussing about with Tiny Pete. "Her machine can stay and help, but she must be escorted back to base. This is too dangerous."

It's then that she grins. "Ah, you are Warmaster now, I keep forgetting. Right. We will do as you command, here, in this situation. Consider it your first lesson." You try to protest, but she shakes her head. "No, no, do not reject it. Whatever your decision, we shall follow. Command us, Warmaster, we are about to go to war."

Kharn's grin widens as she bows to you.

Kharn is right; it's too dangerous to bring Misaka along when we can't put her in a building a mile away with a dedicated MG bodyguard; even then Yakuza goons almost got through (and they would have, too, if they'd have tried just detonating some explosives in the room a floor below where Misaka was shooting from instead of trying a frontal assault against an Eversor).

Tentative Plan: Misaka goes back to base and remotely commands Tiny Pete, who will stay with the group. Misaka is a great sniper, but she would be too vulnerable out here; Kharn, Chiaki, and Midori will be pre-occupied with hordes of bears. Also, AK-47-equipped regulars are a good escort, but I'm fairly sure that those guns can't stop ten or more berserking bears with no sense of self-preservation charging at them. Besides, if there are giant robots at base equipped with anti-infantry weaponry, odds are that Misaka would probably be one of the most qualified people on the planet to drive one. We may need that backup in case this new MG has called in every bear in the countryside for this job.

Get more details from Midori about her abilities that would be very useful in an immediate conflict. Can she hide the scent and sight of a group of soldiers, or confuse animals?

We may also want to see if the base can lend us some air recon support, or real-time satellite imaging of the area. Soldiers leading us around on the ground would be great, but having several pairs of eyes in the air would be awesome. Even if it's a heavily wooded area, they may be able to spot the densest concentrations of the Bear Horde and alert us if we're getting close to them, or if they seem to be shifting in one direction or another.

Leading the bears and the MG to the base would be the safest way to do this, but the MG is probably not an idiot. She probably knows her best chance of killing us (or Midori) lies within the forest, and that she and her horde will get cut down by whatever defenders an incubator with an absurd amount of insane R&D scientists and unlimited funding can afford. You reach up to take off your glasses and massage the bridge of your nose. Really, Kharn? It's not like you're still in training, right? Doesn't she realize that Kyuubey has effectively promoted you into incompetence? You have no idea what it takes to lead, you have zero experience with tactical shit like this. You need to learn more, in a setting that doesn't run the risk of your friends and a whole lot other people dying because of you screwing it up like always.

"Do not sigh and groan when your subordinates are expecting you to command them, Murderface." Kharn chides, her clawed hands on her hips. "That is childish, you know. It does not give the best impression."

Oh, you don't say? You refrain from saying that as you place your glasses back on and clear your throat. It's then that you call Misaka over, and the arms dealer blinks in puzzlement as she runs over, nearly tripping over a branch as she does so. "Y-yes? Murderface, what is it?"

You bite your lip in hesitation before blurting it out. Misaka blinks once more, confused, before frowning very crossly.

"That is not funny joke, Murderface. Misaka must be here. Misaka must see if Tiny Pete's repairs are okay against bears!"

You tell her that she'll have other chances to. Right now, she has to return to base, along with Tiny Pete and the other soldiers. As soon as they're secure there, then Tiny Pete can teleport back here and support you. At least he'll...uh...he'll still get EXP points then, or something, right?

You assume that Misaka will be under threat when she's sent back to the base, I do not think this will be the case.

It seems to me that the enemy is trying to draw us (and by that I specifically mean Murderface and Midori) out by killing our scouts. Based on this I don't think she'll suddenly flank us and cut off our route back to the base.

Nor do I think that she's targeting Misaka at all, hell I doubt she knows Misaka is here. The only way she would attack Misaka is if she was in her way, and the most likely place for that to happen is if Misaka stays with us.

We are 100% guaranteed to get into combat soon, and for that I think we could really use Tiny Pete. His armour and close combat abilities will make him essential to defeating the hordes.

And this way, she'll be there to send backup - which you really can't trust her brother to be able to do in any capacity whatsoever. This makes her smile as well, before finally relenting.

"F-fine! Fine, Misaka will go back, just because Murderface asked! A-and will have Tiny Pete teleport back after we are safe in base!" She looks up at you, pouting. "Murderface still has her teleport beacon, right? The golden cross pendant!"

A brief rummage in your inventory confirms this. You lift it out and show it to her, and her face brightens.

"Ah! Keep it! I will use it to track your location and have Tiny Pete sent there right away!" Misaka smiles, before grabbing your hands with her own. "Misaka is being a good girl, yes?"

You nod at this, smiling. Of course. She's been nothing but a good girl to you from the very start. Tiny Pete lumbers up from behind Misaka, towering over the both of you, and it's with a final pat to the head that you entrust her to the gigantic machine. You nod at it, and the tusked helm with the crimson eye slits nod back.

[COMPLIANCE, CAPTAIN MURDERFACE.] Tiny Pete booms, the words snarled by vox-corruption. At your behest, the remaining soldiers form up around the unlikely pair, weapons drawn, and it's then that they make their way back to the base. More cautious than ever before.

We also need to think about how our enemy will go about doing this.

Mirai can summon bears, but we'll have to assume that she can exert influence on them. Strong enough to make them into a cohesive force and give them orders. Not sure if she has to verbally command them or if she has some telepathy going on.

If she's reasonably intelligent, she'll likely treat them like a traditional army. Send out scouts, keep the bulk of the army near her to keep her safe and so she can immediately order them to go places.

If she's a reasonably experienced tactician (and biologist), she may have them dispersed around the forest with a set of orders to keep an ear and eye out for things. When one of them hears something or catches a glimpse of the target, it goes to notify more bears, which then signal to notify even more bears, etc. etc. until a large enough force is informed. Then they converge.

If she has telepathic abilities with the bears, then all of these things are still valid, just sped up by a factor of three or so.

Hmm. Looking at that angle, if Mirai isn't out there looking for the facility, Chiaki, Midori or isn't already Golden Weapon crazed... then it's also possible that the other incubator already know where it is and she's out here as bait while a seperate strike force goes for the base.
If her bears are the same killer bears that's been around all this while.. she might have had allies that already tracked the hunting parties.

It's probably best for Chiaki and Midori(for illusion cloaking hopefully) to head out to scout Mirai first. We need confirmed visual on the weapon and what sort of airs she's putting on.

We track her and punch a hole through. We're the warmaster, we lead from the front. We punch through, take her out, hopefully with a shot to the soul gem to make it nice and quick and hopefully the bears disperse. Their departure leaves only three individuals left in the forest: you, Kharn, and Midori. What had supposed to be a leisurely slaughter of some oversized woodland creatures with the use of long firearms had now turned into something you had travelled over a literal ocean to get away from: trying to kill a Magical Girl before she kills you. It doesn't help that she seems to have a few friends with her. Large, furry friends who seem to have quite the appetite and sadistic streak.

"Not bad, Warmaster!" Kharn cheers, clapping in applause. "Is not quite how I would have handled it, but it is a smart move, to send a VIP back to base with more than enough protection while we take care of the threat." She smiles. "And I have to say, this is very nostalgic. Just three of us against an army. It is like back in the old days!" She glances at Midori, who seems to be shivering in place. "Well, kind of. Cannot be perfect. Here, Midori. Catch!"

"W-wha...?" Your subordinate is barely able to react quickly enough to catch the rifle tossed to her. It's the Mosin Nagant that Kharn had prepped for hunting, but obviously never got to use. "B-but I don't really use guns, I--"

"Is easy, you know? Just work bolt back and forth with every shot, and then reload after five shots! You load here, five at a time, and then push bolt back in again." Kharn points out the rough and ready rules of killing with a Mosin Nagant. "Aim from the iron sights, and if target is close enough to hit, use rifle as club. Easy!"

Kharn laughs, but the threat in her eyes isn't to be laughed at. You've seen that look before, once, when you glanced down at your reflection from the Gold Desert Eagle's slide.

As such, Midori is properly cowed.

"Y-yes, Miss Valnikov. I'll...I'll do my best." Your subordinate murmurs, holding the rifle tighter.

You frown at Kharn scaring Midori shitless, but instead of calling her out on it, you ask her about what gun she'll be using, since she gave hers to Midori.

"I will not be using a gun, Murderface." Kharn murmurs, her back to you as she flexes the unnaturally-clawed fingers of the hands by her sides. "If the advance party's reports are true, then this means I can finally have my one last sword fight."

It's then that she raises one skeletal hand up to her face - the crimson teardrop of a Soul Gem sparks loudly into existence on the center of her palm, its gildings pure black instead of silver or brass. Its motif thorny spikes, rather than elegant reliefs of angels and angelic wings.

"And I will be taking her skull. With how many of my men she'd killed, I believe I deserve it."

Hey, he gave us the bear hunting trip we asked for.
It's your fault for neglecting to specify that we had to be successful, or that we wouldn't become the hunted.
Or that the bears wouldn't be strong, big, fast, and smart enough to actually threaten a Magical Girl.

You're getting what you asked for, not what you wanted. Deal with it.

In case i can't make it to the next thread - If this MG is her to make an example of Midori, then it's probably best if she doesn't look like herself on the approach, no?

It shouldn't be too taxing on her magic reserves to disguise herself as Kyoko or Sayaka or magical Iori or something. After all, it'd be really embarrassing if our first minion got dead on the first day of Warmaster training.

>> ☐ Anonymous 08/28/12(Tue)16:24 No.20510128

One thing that I'm worried about is how this rival incubator discovered that Midori would be going over to Siberia. Either QB's got a mole in his organization (likely, given how intense the competition seems to be), or Midori may still be unwittingly linked to her incubator in a way; it may even be possible that Midori snuck a call to this incubator while we assigned her to watch over Misaka at the airport. Or perhaps called someone else dear to her, who may have given up the information.

Alternatively, assuming that Midori is loyal to us: the only people who we told about the Siberia operation were Mami, Misaka, Midori, and everyone who was listening in on our conversation within the Lovelace household. I doubt that that one Lovelace guy would have the guts to do such a thing, and Fabiola might not either. But Iori, on the other hand, thinks that her perceived lover has cheated on her and client-zoned her. If she looked out of the window while Chiaki was departing the mansion, she may have caught a glimpse of Midori waiting at the car.

Now, Iori doesn't have a lot of friends left. But she does have money in spades. It is possible that she contacted an incubator in sore need of cash (Midori's former incubator seems to fit this description, as he stoops to making rape videos), and calls out a hit on Chiaki and/or The Green-Haired Bitch What Almost Raped Me and Now Has Stolen My Lover (Midori), both of whom she knows are going to Siberia. This incubator sends out Mirai to kill Chiaki and/or Midori, as she has history with Midori and can take advantage of the murderous kill-bears in Siberia.

Of course, it could also be that this incubator has known about the Siberia base for some time, and dispatched Mirai to Siberia to keep tabs on it.

>>20510128

Alternatively, it could also be that Midori's phone has not been changed since her tenure under the other incubator, and is tapped.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 08/30/12(Thu)08:04 No.20529095

You are a Magical Girl, and you're on the job at the moment, as horribly depressing as it is to think about.

You'd think being an ocean's width from your place of work - you're in Siberia, for fuck's sake - would clue the universe in somehow that you're due for some time off, and that it should ease up on doing its level best to kill you. But no, apparently the universe doesn't care one iota about what you think, what you want, or the concept of balance.

Whatever you may have did in your past life must have been really something.

>>20529095

Hell, what you did to Kharn may have been enough, whatever it was. Enough that even someone like her seemed loathe to tell you.

Good things happen to good people. Bad things happen to bad ones. That's the way it's supposed to work. Sometimes it does. Sometimes it doesn't.

But people like you - the worthless good-for-nothings, those that ruin everything they touch - they happen to the people who did absolutely nothing to deserve it.

The universe has a very sick sense of humor, all right.

You can only hope that the next time you're the butt of the joke, you're no longer alive to deal with it.

In no time at all, your hunting party finds the advance party.

>>20529103

But at the same time, you've never sheared away half of someone's skull in a rough, lacerating cross-section. You've never hacked someone's sternum in half, prised apart their ribcage, and let them die slowly through blood loss and exposure. You've never dismembered anyone to the point that they ceased to resemble anything but piles of greasy meat, globules of yellow fat crusting on hard snow and ice like translucent maggots.

You certainly did not eat half of someone's face before tearing their head clean off their shoulders, spine and all.

The point here is that whoever killed the advance party did a very gruesome job of it.

You almost feel like applauding.

"...Slowly. They died slowly, Murderface." Kharn calls as she stands up, having crouched beside what was once a soldier named Dmitri for a good long while. "You can smell it in the air." She wrinkles her nose, before kicking the cleaved remains of an AK-47 by her armored feet. "Bad spices."

[2/3]

>>20529110

Kharn is understandably displeased about the entire thing, just like you. She is still in her hunting gear - she hasn't transformed yet - but she'd brute-forced her Soul Gem to bring out her main weapon. That being a brutal chainsword, two meters tall, with two rows of wicked teeth lining the blade's edge from front to back. The name MALAL is hacked into its length in crude script, jagged scratches in the black paint forming each letter.

You faintly remember its original name.

Skulltaker.

Off to the side, behind a tree, you hear Midori loudly emptying her stomach, cursing in between heaves.

There's a crunching sound as Kharn stabs Malal into the snowy ground, before breathing deeply through her nose. Her eyes close momentarily - and when they reopen, a crimson tongue of flame sparks into existence in front of her left eye, hovering there for a moment before dying out.

"North. The heretic is the north." Kharn coughs into one brutally-clawed hand before spitting to the side. A glob of dark crimson coloring the snow where it hits. "We can approach her directly, or try and flank her. It is my belief - and desire - to take this upstart head on, but I will cede to your commands, Warmaster." She gives you a nod, wiping her lips on her jacket's sleeve.

How do you react?

Midori wants to confirm the target's identity, let's do that at range, then take a few shots with a sniper rifle. Highly doubtful we'll be able to take her out that easily; Malal probably won't be going hungry today.
Midori can use illusions to distract the bears, and we can take some of them down with the rifles.
No flanking. We're outnumbered; splitting up is asking to get someone swamped.

I think her best use would be as either a opening distraction on the other Magical Girl from a distance by attempting mind fuckery, even if it doesn't work it'll hopefully buy us a few seconds to blow her head off quickly. Thought the idea last thread was to give Midori a chance to talk her friend down first? Admittedly, after this scene, a peaceful resolution seems even more unlikely but I think having Midori and Chiaki go head on to talk first while Kharn, the heavy hitter, flanks has some potential.

Given how the soldiers were killed, it may be a prudent idea to neutralize Mirai first (i.e. get her soul gem and run the fuck back to base), revive her there, then give Midori a chance to speak with her when there aren't tons of sadistic murder-bears around. Ask Midori if she still wants to try to talk Bear-Girl down. If so, then head on approach. We walk on in [redacted] and try to talk to her. She turns hostile, Midori throws up copies of us while everyone goes full evasive. That should buy us time to take her out without getting nommed by the bears.

If Midori relents, then we sneak on up, then same as above. Take out the magical girl to stop the bear horde. If she's alone and it's possible we'll get Kharn to dismember her so we can ask questions, but that's a secondary concern.

Another thing about bears is that they hunt by smell, Also, we can't assume that bringing Midori out will make everything better, our enemy can assume that we have made our own illusions.

There is something, as Midori if she as seen Mirai Wakaba in uniform and where is her soul gem located.
Also ask if Midori can project an illusion of herself.

Minor problem with flanking I can see is trying to get the drop on a girl with bear controlling powers and likely some kind of hunting experience in the wild. We have Kharn to match her outdoor skills so it's not a huge deal, but maybe flanking if noticed (say through scent) will allow them to counter ambush us while attempting to get around them.

Still, I think flanking is the best option. Direct confrontation without information is asking for trouble and I suspect Kharn just wants to get in there. We should be cool about this. Get Kharn to help the flank so we don't get noticed.

Yeah, maybe having Kharn flank was ill considered, now that I think about it. Maybe have her and Midori go in front while Chiaki flanks? Chiaki, unlike the other two, can completely avoid every possible monster bear by using timestop in short bursts.

Also, Kharn's power seems to be some sort of far sight or clairvoyance? And using it made her spit up blood? That ain't good...

One thing we have to worry about his how effective a flank would really be. If Mirai is linked to the bears she's able to summon (and maybe control), then she's effectively got eyes and ears and keen hunting noses everywhere. A surprise attack would consist of us either hitting her from very far away, or else surprising her with something completely unexpected and then hitting her hard.

Either way, we should have a quick talk with Midori and see if she has any other abilities that would be useful in a direct conflict such as this, or if her illusion abilities can mask other things such as smell or noise. She's faced down witches before, so she may have abilities that would come in handy here.

You ignore the fact that you've just seen your former partner spit blood - certainly not something that signifies her being in the pink of health - and try to decide on what to do. Granted, you're going up against something you absolutely have no idea about - no twelve-page dossier from Kyuubey describing every single facet of your target, from her offensive capabilities to the color of underwear she wears - and the last time that happened, it ended in a horrific bloodbath. Sure, you lived through it, as well as Iori, but the fact was it could've gone down a whole lot better.

...Iori. It almost feels like it's been ages since you saw her, or talked to her. Even if it's only been a day or so, realistically.

You clear your mind of the all-too-tempting ruminations concerning a brown-haired idol and make the decision. At the same time, Midori emerges from her cover, pale and trembling but still determined, holding onto her rifle hard enough for the wood to creak.

Kharn will be doing the flanking, you decide. She knows the lay of the land better than you - and if Midori's suspicions were at all correct, then the Magical Girl would be expecting you and her most of all - your former partner may not be something she might have prepared for.

Well, to be frank, you doubt anyone could adequately prepare against the Betrayer. Even you yourself doubt that you'd survive an encounter with her, and Pinky had been kind enough to put the odds of such an unlikelyhood in numerical values.

"So I am to take the role of The Ghost, instead?" Kharn grins through blood-pinked teeth. "THis is new. And amusing. I think I like it."

You're glad she's so enthusiastic about the idea. In the meantime, you and Midori will be heading North - right into the lair of the enemy, so to speak. If the girl truly is Wakaba Mirai, then Midori can, at the very least, try and talk her down.

If it comes down to violence - and you're pretty sure it will - then that would be Kharn's cue to come charging in. Midori and you will provide covering fire, take down as many bears as you can, even if you have to resort to stopping time, so that your former partner is clear to take another skull for her collection.

"Haha! See, that is another thing I like about you. You do not mind people's hobbies, even if they are sometimes strange." Kharn seems to cheer up at this, the grim mood from earlier lifting slightly. "Very well, let us keep radio contact, yes?" She taps the side of her headset. "If you are needing me to charge in before she attacks, just use our old battle cry. You remember that at least, eh?"

...Actually, you don't, so you shake your head. Kharn sighs, a wistful smile curling her lips, before she whispers it to you.

"Very well, I go to flank the Enemy." Kharn hefts Malal up against her jacket-clad shoulder. "By my estimate, she is half a kilometer up. Be careful - I smell many bears with her, and they are hungry with blood." She nods at your rifle. "Perhaps get something with automatic fire, eh, Murderface? Oh, and if possible, try to aim without hitting the thigh or the paws." She grins. "Those are the best parts of the bear, and we may as well salvage them after this hunt."

...Yes. Of course. Good thinking, Kharn.

It's with a cackle that your former partner suddenly dashes off to the side - with a surprising speed that you gauge is even faster than Sayaka, faster than Kirika - and it only takes her a moment to disappear.

Yeah, all Eversors are crazy. Crazy as foxes. Completely bananas.

Only problem really is having faith in Midori's ability to protect herself. She's not really a direct combat kind of girl though I'm sure she's more trained than Iori so we shouldn't handle her with kid gloves.

Still, I doubt if shit really hits the fan we could leave her alone while we berserker pack it up and it's possible Midori's strength isn't so hot against packs of animals with remote orders and senses Midori isn't as familiar with as say a humans.

Quite possibly. It's not like Magical Girls live to old age. Hell, I think Mami is probably breaking records right now.

Considering that we can use magical energy to substitute for physical limitations and to accelerate shit, It's a decent theory that you can suck power back out the other way. Not a bad deal if you're desperate, since the body is just a shell now.

Hence it can be viewed as a magical construct. I'm not saying there is anything more than tiny amounts of evidence for this viewpoint, I just think it's a point worth considering. You shake your head and dismiss her doubts as best you could. It was only a matter of when, not if, anyway - and you're somewhat glad that you're dealing with it here, in the wilderness, rather than somewhere with a whole lot of civilians just begging to be collateraled. Granted, you're not in the best of spots, the playing field as skewed as it is - but at least you have The Betrayer on your side.

Heh. You can't help but smirk at the irony of that last sentence.

Of course, you don't expect her to do the deed herself, if anything. You know full well how she's geared more towards subterfuge and espionage. Callidus are not meant to take out multiple targets in an openly hostile environment, not in the way that Eversors and Vindicares are trained to. If it comes to a bloodbath - or rather, when - she has full license to conceal herself and escape from combat. You and Kharn will start the killing yourselves. You only ask that she at least radio in for backup in case things start going pear-shaped.

Midori's eyes go wide at that, before shaking her head furiously. "N-no. No, sempai, do you know what you're asking me? You're telling me to run out on you when you need me the most!" She shakes her head. "I...I don't use guns a whole lot, but I know how to use one! I am not leaving you and Miss Valnikov in the middle of a firefight, sempai! I'm not some delicate waif you need to protect!"

You narrow your eyes slightly at this, and your subordinate shrinks back as if struck. "N-no, um, what I meant to say, sempai, is--"

She shrinks back even further as you take her Mosin Nagant from her hands. She tries to pull back, but she lets go after the second tug, now tearful.

"S-sempai...I-I'm sorry, I just got carried away--"

You interrupt her stumbling apologies by taking the strange, blocky gun you racked from your Shield earlier and press it into her hands. Midori blinking at the strange, heavy firearm, and then at you.

You tell her that it is never nice to kill someone you know, someone you once considered as a friend. But in your line of work, as Magical Girls, it happens - you can only pray that you're strong enough to do so when it does.

For the record,you were simply looking at things in a logical manner. It's strange for you to say that, but that's what you're doing, right now, as Warmaster. Of course, if she believes she is strong enough to facilitate the murder of a former ally, then she should say so. She should tell her yourself, with her own words.

Midori is silent at this, eyes glistening, and she nods after a moment.

"I can, sempai. You can trust me. And...and I'll do what you ask me to." It's then that she smiles. "I'll...I'll see if I can get some of the bears out of your way, too. They're dumb animals, so they should be easy enough to fool with illusions, right?"

You nod at this as you take the two rifles and stash them inside your Shield - racking the metallic barrier again for something with a bit more firepower. A heavy clack of metal on metal - and you blink at the rather oversized M60 machine gun falling onto your hands. Full magazine too, from what you can tell from the weight.

For some reason, it feels nostalgic. The good kind of nostalgic.

So does anyone have any guesses what we did to Kharn?

I have a suspicious that actually WE did something, probably killing a load of innocents, and then she took the fall for us, or we pinned it on her.

If she took the fall for something we did, that could explain why she doesn't want to kill us, and why we gave her our glasses as a heartfelt gift before she left.

It's just a thought that struck me.

It would also explain why she refuses to talk to us about it: she doesn't want us to know what we really did, she's trying to save us from the guilt.

It's not airtight, but there's something about the idea that makes sense to me.

"...What sort of gun is this, Sempai?" Midori asks, a confused note to her voice. "I've never seen this kind of gun before. I mean, I can shoot it well enough with one hand, but--" She blinks as she sees your new toy. "Whoa. Um. I...wow. Sempai, forget rifles. Machine guns are your thing. You should carry one around more often."

That's an interesting proposition, but it's now that you tell her to keep quiet. Magical Girl Hunting Time is now - and any more delays would mean Kharn skulking about in the snow longer than her patience can last. And you have the sneaking feeling that your former partner isn't one to be patient.

"R-right. Shutting up now, Sempai." She holds the strange gun like you'd hold an SMG - the free hand supporting the barrel underneath. As oversized as it is, you suppose it makes sense.

You just hope she doesn't accidentally hit you with the damn thing. You're not sure what kind of damage the rounds it's chambered with can do, but you're not eager to find out for yourself.

The both of you finally continue your journey forward. Into the mouth of the enemy, as it were.

Sometimes, the simplest tricks are the best tricks.

You just hope that this is one of those times.

Kharn's estimate is frighteningly accurate; exactly a half kilometer away, she had said, and half a kilometer into your trek do you come across a clearing, a wide circular one ringed by the forest itself. You stop just before you enter it, however, choosing to scope it out first.

Inside that clearing are bears - and while the only ones you've seen are on the National Geographic channel, you're struck by how...gigantic they are, in person. Some of them, you realize, could take Tiny Pete in a fight. Hell, one of them was bigger than him, and could have torn the daemon form of Lance Kilgore without any difficulty.

And all of them are feeding, muzzles and teeth crimson with filthy blood. The clearing isn't 'clean', not as such. The snow is a dirty, mottled red, stained by the broken and half-eaten corpses littering it. The entire place is a charnel house, and you hear Midori stifle her retching behind you.

At the very center of that clearing, surrounded by her charges, is a young woman with rather puffy crimson hair. Her Magical Girl costume somewhat similar to the girl you murdered in Mami's apartment - colors of black and crimson, somewhat cut to show bare swathes of flesh on her body. It's an eye-catching, if not rather indecent design, and you wonder how she can stand there in this freezing weather.

Her eyes are closed, as if in meditation, her hands resting on the massive, wide-bladed sword stabbed in the ground in front of her. A quick look at the weapon confirms it's not a golden blade - rather, it is an ornate silver one, with brass gilding. It's wide enough to function as sword and shield at the same time.

You glance towards Midori, who seems to have recovered, and she nods. Her face paler than it has ever been, but her eyes still set.

"It's her, Sempai. It's Wakaba Mirai." Midori's grip on her bolter tightens. "That's her weapon too. I...I can't believe she's actually here."

Well. You were hoping it was to the contrary, but at least you know who you're dealing with, now.

A crackle of your headset brings you to attention. "Murderface?" A familiar voice comes on. "I have been in place five minutes ago! Where have you been! I can see you from hiding spot. Ahaha, good choice of weapon! I remember that is your favorite. Now this really is a reunion!"

You apologize quietly, and tell her that you had to do some last minute adjustments. You try to figure out where she's spying at you from, but all the damn snow is making it difficult. You give up.

"Very well, then. I will wait for your signal. At your command, we will start hunting."

You murmur an affirmative. You turn to Midori, who looks as ready as she'll ever be.

A girl without a Soul Gem is a corpse, just like a person without a heart or brain is a corpse. The Soul Gem seems to be the girl's "brain" and when an MG and their gem are separated, they're brain dead. Give them enough time and they're dead dead. A Soul Gem can preserve corpses; Kyouko keeps Sayaka around for...reasons through that method.

If the connection got muddied during any separation, Sayaka would have fallen out before QB started poking her Gem to show what it'd be like to get gangbanged by Kyousuke.

Also, Sayaka went bugfuck because she got NTRed and thought she was a zombie, not because of the zombie trick. "It doesn't hurt anymore" is a symbolic thing, showing that she's given into her monstrous nature (and giving a resounding no to the episode title's question). Do y'all even allusion?

You rack the slide of your new M60 as you alert Kharn to what you're about to do - rather, you're going to let Midori try and talk to the rogue Magical Girl, now that she's confirmed as your subordinate's former colleague. Kharn growls in response to that, but grumbles an affirmative. She warns you that if you try and take her skull away from her, she'll be very cross with you, and may not talk with you for a while.

You try not to smile at this, considerin the situation, and you nod at Midori, who looks like she's about to meet her executioner. She nods back in return, and it's then that she steps forward, into the clearing - and with you exactly a step behind.

The M60 raised. Not leveled, but ready to fire at a moment's notice. Your finger caressing the trigger lightly.

The very first step Midori makes in the clearing is when all the bears - those feeding, those just milling around, and those seemingly napping - suddenly turn to look at her in unison. It's a strange sight, to see beasts meant to act and function alone move as one entity - and at the same time they focus on Midori do Mirai's eyes open.

"Hanegawa Midori-san." Mirai says, her voice soft, clear, and haughty. "I expected better of you. I never thought I'd see the day when you'd turn your back on us. On me."

You hear Midori's breath catch in her throat at this, and it takes her a moment to reply. "Wakaba Mirai-san, I..." She looks back at you for the briefest moment, before turning back to her former colleague. "I'm sorry. I didn't...mean for you to take this burden up. But I...I meant to leave, a long time ago. I just couldn't handle the assignments being given to me anymore, I can't--"

It's then that she places her hand back on the handle of her sword. "Still, I am not unreasonable. I will let you surrender yourself to the mercy of our Incubator. You raise an eyebrow at this, but you don't let yourself get baited into showing your hand much too early in this confrontation. Instead, you allow yourself a half-smile - a curious thing to do, considering that the both of you are now surrounded by 500 pound killing machines.

You ask Mirai if she's at all curious as to why Midori is your subordinate. Does she not care about Midori's side of the story? About what her Incubator may not have told her? If she considered her time with Midori as important, then shouldn't she at least listen to what her former colleague has to say before judging her?

Mirai narrows her eyes at you, before shaking her head. "The Incubator has spoken. Guilty. And I am to return her Soul Gem, whatever the cost." It's with a minute gesture that she tugs the rest of her sword out of the ground - and with that small movement, the bears begin to howl, begin to roar, as they all focus on you and your subordinate. Teeth bared, furs bristled. Claws scraping against hard ice.

"I will ask you once more Hanegawa Midori, and I will not ask you again. Throw me your Soul Gem, submit yourself to my custody, and I will let your friend live."

Midori seems to be near tears, now, the bolter shaking in her hands. It's then that she wipes her eyes with the sleeve of her jacket, before slowly shaking her head no.

"I...I'm not leaving Matsuda-sempai, Mirai-san. I'm sorry, but..I can't. I..." She looks at you, and then back at her best friend.

"I love sempai. M-maybe she doesn't feel the same way, b-but she's been here for me, more than anyone else has, and...and I'm not repaying her by turning my back on her."

It's with the sound of metal clacking upon metal that she raises the bolter, in her hands - and aims it at Wakaba Mirai.

"So I'm...I'm telling you now, Mirai-san. I'm not surrendering. Get out of Siberia. Tell Jyuubey...t-that I'm working for Kyuubey-san, now. He can take his assignments - the ones where I had to work with people who RAPE helpless girls just for the kick of it - and die in...in a fire." She grits her teeth. "Leave me and Sempai alone, Mirai-san. Or I swear...I swear I'll kill you myself."

Mirai lets out a small sigh, before shaking her head. "Then I did what I could." It's then that she hefts her blade up into the sky, one-handedly - and the bears surrounding you suddenly heave up on their hind legs, standing up, their roars now deafeningly loud. "I will kill the both of you, now, and leave you as carrion for the bears." She looks at Midori, her eyes clear of any darkness.

That fact alone, to you, makes this encounter a whole lot more depressing.

"Any last words, Murderface?" Wakaba Mirai points her sword at you.

[x] Laugh at this. Just laugh. You know, start with a quiet chuckling that slowly turns into a full-fledged laughter while it starts rocking your body and then transforms into a Higurashi-levels-of-crazy manic laughter.

I clutch my stomach as I reach the hotel. That was... unexpected. I'm just glad she didn't disembowel me.

Urf. I'm glad I decided to try the bear stew. Hurling chunks is the last thing I need to do in a suit.

“How long will you be planning to stay, sir?” The receptionist asks. I hand her the card my employer gave to me.

“Oh, well then. Enjoy your stay!”

Three hours pass before my body decides it has shrugged off the damage. I make myself presentable and head down for lunch.

The hotel's cafe is a less extravagant than I expected. Then again, hardly anyone visits this part of Russia. I slink down into a seat and order the special. Bear Stew, hm.

I'm halfway into my (surprisingly delicious) bear stew when I'm interrupted. The waitress asks if I could share my seat with some customers. I'm surprised by this, since the place is full of seats, but I acquiesce.

It wasn't long before I hear a familiar voice.

“Figliolo! It's been a while!” A familiar voice rings. I look up. It's a literal one-in-a-million chance.

I brighten up. “Dio padre! Dio Madre! How have you been?”

“The yakuza aren't all that forthcoming with alliances, though they are willing to let us handle some fringe services.” I report.

“Though, why a mercernary? You could have gone for a much better cover.” my mother asks.

“It's mostly for the money. You'd be surprised how poor cybersecurity is at times.” I reply.

“And what's thos about marriage?” Both of them splutter. “Who's the lucky lady?”

“Ahaha... you'll meet her soon, I promise!” I divert the conversation somewhere else. “So, what brings you here to Siberia?”

“I’d be lying if I said we’re here on a holiday. We’re here on business. We have some... business opportunities up in the frigid wastes.” Dad casually mentions.

“The usual?” I ask.

“Arms trafficking.” Dad says.

“You’re kidding me.”

“I am. We’ve acquired a weapons factory out here and we’re gonna take a look. I’d love it if you could accompany us, for old times’ sake.”

“I’d be glad to. it’s been a long time since we last saw each other.”

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 08/31/12(Fri)11:06 No.20542537

You are a Magical Girl, and you've just been asked what your last words would be.

At swordpoint by a Magical Girl from a rival faction, no less.

In Siberia.

Surrounded by demonic ninja superbears, driven mad with bloodlust and the stink of exposed intestines steaming in the acridly-frigid air.

The breath you let out mists in front of your face, fogging your glasses momentarily as you inhale.

The smile on your lips is a predatory one as you murmur your answer into your headset's microphone - and a madwoman's cackling tickles your ears just as everything goes to hell.

You've thought about that question before. Lots of times, too many to count. You don't know if it's just you being morbid, or some misguided notion that someone would actually care what you say when you finally breathe your last.

You're not even sure if it's simply wishful thinking, that someone will actually be there to listen while you bleed out in a gutter somewhere, painkillers and blood forming a gruesome slushie in the half-melted snow.

What you do know, what you are sure about, is that you've decided on your answer, long ago. You've chosen, in your last moments, to thank whoever finally had enough goodness in their heart to put you out of your misery. To thank that someone who had been brave enough to do what you yourself had been too much of a coward - too much of a failure - to actually do the deed yourself.

Depending on who it was, you'd probably be apologizing to them, too. God knows you've made a lot of mistakes - some of them you remember, and the vast majority of them eaten away by the amnesia clouding you mind. Whatever it is you did, you would apologize profusely with what little breath you had left to pull in your lungs.

But you would not ask for forgiveness, no. Nor will you ask them to forget what you did. You're no saint to ask for that. They've earned their prize, and you would be loathe to ruin their moment of satisfaction, of catharsis. Let them enjoy the sight of you broken and dying - it'd be the first time you actually managed to do good by someone, anyway.

Everything started going to hell a split second after Wakaba Mirai barely managed to block the snarling, adamantine-toothed beast that was the chainsword Malal. You have no idea how she did it - all you saw was Kharn's silhouette flickering into view behind the rogue Magical Girl, her shape broken by Malal's brutish profile.

It seemed that reality took a few seconds to catch up to your friend, too - you registering the sight of the double-rowed, monomolecular,adamantium teeth of the chainblade madly chewing air a moment before its deafening whine actually reached your ears.

You felt the impact of the two weapons smashing together, the force enough to have shattered any ten lesser blades all at once, before you heard the actual crash of reinforced metal upon polished swordsteel.

And you saw Kharn cackle her own last words before you even heard them over the roar of her chainsaw, over the roar of all the bears launching themselves forward in once concerted effort to murder you.

You don't catch it quite clearly, really, but it has something to do with skulls.

The fully-loaded M60 in your grasp is heavy and cold, and the Shield on your arm is ticking.

This close to death, you've never felt more alive.

What do you do?

The solution to the bear problem

>> ☐ Anonymous 08/31/12(Fri)11:41 No.20542794

>>20542564

Prioritize targets amongst the bears, starting with the closest ones and then the fastest ones. They're likely going to be charging on all fours, so their heads will make an apparent target; aim for headshots to kill the bears dead on. Keep an eye on Midori, tell her to go for headshots (or legshots) as well. With bears of this size going on a berserking rampage, machinegun and/or bolter rounds might not serve to stagger them. Thus, we need to either shoot out their front legs or pierce their skulls.

If things appear to be getting too heated, timestop, relocate Midori and ourselves to a more defensible location, then resume firing. Once all bears are dead, timestop, and fire pointblank at Mirai.

The moment you start firing is the moment you start laughing.

You...you're not quite sure what you find so amusing, but the sheer lunacy of the situation seems to have struck you enough that you're absolutely tickled by it. Laughing hard enough that you're actually in danger of dropping the bucking, juddering machinegun in your hands - and it takes all of your training, all of your experience, to keep a disciplined firing lane and not spray your ever-dwindling ammunition all over the goddamn place.

You're in Siberia, you think to yourself, miles and miles away from home, an entire ocean's width from the ever-dwindling group of people that who would probably visit your funeral (if they've nothing to do on that day, that is). In the middle of nowhere, in a snow-covered forest, surrounded by bears who would like nothing more than to make a snack out of a magical girl - the absolute idiocy of the situation you've put yourself in is incredible. Even by your standards.

You laugh as you realize that this is such a stupid place to die in.

Of course, that's not all you're laughing at. The bears - for all their bulk, for all their seeming ferocity - they immediately perish as soon as you send a burst of shots at their direction. You thought they'd last a bit longer, being demonic man-eating superbears. Missing large chunks from their skull shouldn't be any problem for them, but from the way they're collapsing to the snowy ground in mid-charge, you suppose they're not as immune to gunfire as you previously thought.

Bears. Seriously. Kyoko would never believe this.

Midori, true to her word, is surprisingly keeping good form with the bolter you've given her - covering you from behind, moving in concert as you pivot to pick off the attacking ursine bastards as they get closer and closer - ensuring that no one gets at your six without them putting a fat, mass-reactive round in their throats.

And that is no exagerration - you've heard the bassy, rifle-like report of the stubby pistol - and the wet, crunchy explosion that follows it as its unfortunate furry victim falls forward with their head blown clean off, along with half their torso all but sheared away. The rounds EXPLODE as soon as they smash into living flesh, creating a permanent wound channel that no one will be able to walk away from.

Wherever your Shield got that pistol from must really be a world of suck if they needed ordnance that powerful.

But back to Midori. She's actually picking her shots, instead of firing wildly. A good thing, considering that you don't quite have a spare magazine in case she needs reloading. You figure that as soon as she runs out - and she inevitably will - you'll pass her the M60 as you take something else from your Shield.

...The Golden Desert Eagle, honestly, is starting to look very attractive at this point.

You know, the whole 'magical' company does give me some unfortunate implications. Sure, it allows Mami to retire but I think some unsavoury methods are employed to stop the company from running out of prey. Such as:

1. Underperforming magical girls are kept in a support role for too long on purpose so they will have little chance of cleansing their soul gems before witching out.
2. Witches who have a high familiar spawn rate become protected in order to farm the grief seeds that the familiars will give off when they become witches.

It has been my theory that, in the original show, the entirety of Mitakihara Town was a project of QB's to create and environment condusive to witch harvesting. Make a town that people get really into building up, where people feel they can really put their heart and soul into making a good place to live, like Madoka's mom (who's snap wish is to kill her rivals). But make it just boring and perfect enough, and people start to chafe, like the woman Mami saved.

This creates a world where the women who built the place have strong hopes and dreams, collectively wishing for a better world that QB can provide. They burn out, though, as the trials of building said world eventually become too much, and turn into a witch that their daughters have to clean up.

TLDR; QB smiled and girls died.

The both of you continue to dwindle Siberia's unchecked bear population with bullets and bolt rounds - but you stop laughing as soon as you come upon an unwanted revelation: each bear you kill, each ursine threat you dispatch is somehow replaced by two, or three, or more. Reinforcements roaring in even before the bodies had hit the floor.

They seem to be coming from all corners - loping, springing from the surrounding trees, their bulks crashing into each other as well as the ring of bear corpses now forming around the clearing in their haste to rip and tear and devour magical girl flesh. It's almost as if every demonic bear in this godforsaken shithole had been alerted to your presence - and seeing how Wakaba Mirai seemed to have the bears earlier in the palm of her hand, that may not be a far-off possibility.

You take a moment to look at the Magical Girl duel that you've been studiously ignoring ever since you started shooting - and you find yourself smiling again, despite the fact that your chances of survival are slowly dwindling.

Kharn is having so much fun right now, you almost feel jealous.

Your understanding of entropy is incorrect.

It's basically the tendancy for systems to move towards equilibrium. Or, to put it another way, if there are differences, time will make them less.

The heat death of the universe is an evenly distributed soup of elementary particles of equal energy.

Heat Death is different from the Big Crunch, (iirc, that's the one where everything flings itself apart.)

Heat Death, in my layman's understanding, is that no reaction producing work energy is perfectly efficient - therefore, in a few gorillion years, all the energy in the universe will have been converted to unusable forms and all creation will freeze over into perfect entropy.

Wakaba Mirai is clearly experienced with her massive broadsword. Wide enough to serve as a shield and sharp enough to cleave rock and steel, her strokes are swift, clean and practiced. Her calm, composed face focused and determined as she attacks, blocks, parries and ripostes. Despite the unorthodox weapon in her hands, you see a classical pugilist's education at work here, and it's beautiful in its own right.

Kharn. Now, your former partner is something else. As far removed in style, poise and technique from Mirai as anyone could possibly be - Kharn is an absolute terror with Malal in her hands. Each chop, each slash, each brutal hack is made with horrifying force that you see Mirai's entire frame tremble with every blocked impact. Her movements, while devoid of Mirai's studied grace, has the no-nonsense fluidity of a hardened specialist - one unafraid to use everything and anything to her advantage to win, but at the same time would cripple herself just to make things a bit more interesting.

A sudden clinch between the both of them - and you see Kharn sent skidding back a few feet, Mirai trying to gain some distance from the obviously crazy swordswoman. A motion of her free hand, and a particularly large specimen of Ursus Maritimus interposes itself between them.

Your former partner merely laughs at this, before suddenly moving forward - flashing Malal across the monster's front. Cleaving it in two, from belly to hip, and shouldering her way through the twitching, bleeding remains.

"WHAT SICK GIRL SENDS BEARS TO FIGHT KHARN?!"

It doesn't look like she needs help at the moment.

What do you do?

Get in contact with Misaka and the rest. Are they back at base arriving there? If they are, tell Misaka to attach a beacon or GPS device to Tiny Pete and have him teleport here. He would be very useful here, if nothing else than to keep Chiaki and Midori safe from bears that get through the line of fire. "Sempai, I'm out," Midori says matter-of-factly behind you, and despite the slight edge of panic in her voice, she's being commendably calm for stating that she's just run out of ammunition in the middle of a firefight. One that's looking nowhere near finished, with more bears clawing their way to top of the hills of corpses your firing lanes have made in the clearing's perimeter.

Wordlessly, you pass her the still-smoking M60 - by your estimate, it's still got around a third, slightly less than half a magazine's worth of ammunition - and you immediately rack your Shield as your green-haired subordinate continues where you left off.

The Shield dispenses...something you had hoped it wouldn't dispense. It's Kirika's Muramasa, the XX Golden Weapon. And unlike the Desert Eagle, where you find that you could easily hold it without going insane right off the bat - just holding the Muramasa in your hands is enough to make your entire body freeze, your heartbeat thudding in your ears, the roar of blood blocking out everything else.

You find yourself swallowing hard - your throat dry - as you grasp the handle with one hand, the sheathe gripped tightly with your other. The dying rays of sunlight reflecting off the brilliant golden blade, making it blaze as you unsheathe it little by little.

So beautiful. So deadly. It's...you have no words. You have to use it. Your entire body is aching to cut something with it. Anything - a bear, a Magical Girl...even the Betrayer herself. Anything, just so long as it cuts into flesh...

It's then that you hear Midori scream from behind you, her pained shriek interlaced with a guttural roar - and you whirl around to see a rather impressive specimen of Ursus Maritimus standing over your subordinate, about to give her a sound mauling. Its jaws already opened wide, teeth already crimsoned with human blood. The two mangled sections of what was once a properly-working M60 lying by her feet.

What do you do? You have mere moments to react before Midori dies.

Deconstruction does not form entertainment unless subsequently reconstructed. It's just an examination of the workings and mechanics of a given form.

Hell, talking about a show as "a deconstruction" is kinda misleading anyway. It's evident that deconstruction has OCCURRED, prior to it's creation, but without the creators subsequently going "and having now worked this out, we can do This Different Thing", there is nothing entertaining there, it's just how "Form/Genre X works".

No time. No time to worry about corruption. No time to worry about how it may reduce you to a drooling, black-eyed, snarling monstrosity the longer you hold it, the longer you think about using it. You have no time for rationality, no time for second thoughts, and certainly no time for regrets.

You launch yourself at the bear as you clumsily reverse your grip on the thrice-damned pigsticker of Kirika's - and you grit your teeth as you shove your right arm, shield and all, into the roaring bear's mouth.

There's a horrific crash of enamel digging into polished metal as the rabid Ursus Maritimus tries its level best to bite into the Shield-shaped treat it's just been forced to fellate. It's just too bad that you forced the Shield into its mouth lengthwise, the shield's entire width preventing it from fully closing its jaw on your arm and making a snack of it.

You take advantage of the split-second moment of confusion and helplessness as you quickly and brutally disembowel the bear. Stabbing the great furry bastard right in its gut, before sawing the blade back and forth in quick workmanlike cuts upward and then to the side. The beast begins to trash and howl and claw at you as you start carving its insides as it stands on its own two feet - but you ignore the deep, jagged cuts its claws make on your back and arms as you stubbornly hold onto it, all the while murdering it while it stood.

It's only until you hear - and then see - its intestines fall out in thick, wormish ropes slick with gore that you finally kick off of the slaughtered creature - and it falls back, lifeless, its entire front slashed open and torn out, just like its victims.

You look down on your victim, barely breathing hard, barely feeling the sting of the many cuts your victim had gouged out of your flesh, through your uniform. You barely even take notice of the green-haired whelp screaming your name as she grabs your arm, begging you to drop the sword, to come back to her.

You only notice the remaining bears as they warily circle the both of you, now. You only notice the two Magical Girls trying to kill each other at the edge of the clearing. The cursed one clearly having the upper hand, here, despite her broken form. Despite her heretical form.

A few more moments, and it's then that the brilliant one breaks away from the clinch - clutching a grievous wound to her side. Her inferior weapon, a silver plaything, is riddled scratches and gouges, from the broken one's beastly weapon. She is hobbling back into the forest, leaving a blood trail, trying to escape.

"WHAT ARE YOU DOING, HERETIC?" You hear the broken one shout, chilling laughter in her voice. "DO NOT RUN AWAY! COME, WE HAVE MORE TO TALK ABOUT!" She tries to give chase, but is hobbling - each step causing her to limp, sparks flying from one of her curiously-made legs.

You lick your bloodied lips at the thought of ripping her heart from her body and devouring it.

What do you do?

[]Hunt the brilliant one. Her blood is pure, even if her heart is not.

It's commendable, really, how your kind refuses to let go of the things they very well should.

[Sempai! Sempai, please listen to me! SEMPAI! PLEASE, LET GO OF THE SWORD!]

You should shut up whoever's shouting at you. She is getting bothersome.

No? Why not? Her screams were fine, earlier. Full of fear and disebelief. But it is just getting annoying, now. She is disappointed. She no longer trusts you. It'll only take a second to slit her throat. No more voice.

Very well then, what would your alternative be?

The last time Chiaki went full FOFA she didn't get a chance to stop (IIRC) but she also didn't target any of her allies (or consider targeting them, rather). As such, I think this is just the gradual progression of the madness seeping into Homura, which is at about 66% now. Kilgore and Kiraka both killed several people before they went (even more) crazy and their eyes turned black, so it stands to reason that since we've killed a few with golden weapons we're getting nearly there.

But go ahead and tell about how you know everything about writing n' shit.

This is hilarious. What makes you think you're strong enough to survive this little fetch quest our pink lady's sent you on?

You had to rely on a CHILD to kill me, Murderface. What does that say about you, hmm? Making a fourteen-year-old do her dirty work for her? Not really Warmaster material, if I do say so myself.

Just give it up. It's much easier if you do. You're not the first to fall for it - and you won't be the last, either. Why fight it when it's going to be an inevitability instead?

Well. You're stubborn. That's probably your only redeeming quality. Fine, go play around - it's not like you'll have a choice next time. You're just as corrupted as we are - and you'll be joining us, just like the rest.

"You stupid bitch." You hoarsely rasp through a throat that feels like you've just been throwing up battery acid for the last four hours - and you find yourself on your knees, a puddle of dried, crusted blood soaking into the snow below you. Muramasa lying a few metres away from you, its mirror-like blade stained a slight pink from all the blood it's been slaking itself on. "...Do that again, and I'll kill you a second time."

You growl this out to the empty air, expecting the dead to spit it back at you.

Pinky is always FAR more focused on us than anyone else as far as we know. We've spent a good deal of time with her too. The fact that we have a Golden Gun speaks to that. Im honestly surprised we havent seen her show up yet. This seems like the kind of thing she jump at the chance to fuck up.

No response. Whatever that was - whatever it had been, speaking in Kirika's voice - it's gone now, gone back wherever it came from.

Good. Good. For fuck's sake, that voice of hers never really left you after her retirement. The mere thought of it made you physically ill - and it's in full effect now, especially after she almost just made you kill your former partner.

It's only then that you finally realize that something is clasping you around your waist, hugging you close, shivering all the while, kneeling on the same snow-packed ground as you. You blink wearily as your eyes focus, and you see your subordinate latched onto you like her life depends on it.

It's also then that you see the long, bloody gouges on her arms, as if something had tried to cut their way out of her grasp.

"N-not leaving sempai," You hear Midori's pain-choked sob, the girl's cries muffledby your bloody and tattered uniform. N-no matter what happens, I'm not letting go..."

What do you do?

Have you ever stopped to consider that the golden weapons aren't like a light switch, and that there's still some wiggle room in how much control we can maintain depending on the circumstances? We managed to avoid blowing Sayaka's brains out, after all. Thinking that taking the sword is INSTANT GAME OVER despite there being no proof of this, and then when that ends up NOT being the case, claiming that he MEANT to give us a game over but then changed his mind at the last minute, is kind of stretching your assumptions a little.

Keep in mind we're supposed to be collecting twenty of these things, as the plot goes on our chances of getting stuck with one are going to grow from here. If a lot of the weapons will dead end us upon use, this is going to be a short fuckin' quest.

Which is why we need to avoid using them at all cost. EVERYTHING that has been shown to us about these weapons has told us that they dont take long to drive you from semi-sane Magical girl to FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS!!!!!!!!!!!! Hell QB told us a few threads back Kirikas levels of corruption went from ~11% to near 100% moments after she received the sword. MOMENTS. Not days, not weeks, mere second after she touched it. It probably took Kilgore a little longer because he was not magical, and the gauntlets werent made for him. Hell we ALMOST KILLED some when we got MAD with one in our hand. Thses things are NOT worth the cost of using them, and the way they have been talked about, they ARE a BAD END if we use it for more than 3 seconds. Hell the whole reason we are in Siberia right now is to try and find a way to make it corrupt us less. But this is before that. And /tg/ made the mistake of using the weapon to kill something before we got there.

Given the genre and how dangerous things are in general(including the danger posed by, erm, ourselves) we should probably avoid getting romantic with our partners.

Also, just going for the friends-with-benefit hedonism route wouldn't be a good idea either when it comes to her at least, because Midori's soft enough to really not do well psychologically with those mixed signals. And even if she thinks she can handle friends with benefits, she might not be able to at all and things will turn out bad.

You hold yourself perfectly still for a moment, trying to fight back a wave of nausea you're pretty sure is from blood loss - and it's then that you move to carefully extract yourself from Midori's grasp, murmuring to the desperate girl that you're...back, now, wherever you came from. You're not going to do anything weird any longer. The danger has passed.

If anything, she only wraps herself tighter around you, as if absolutely unable to take that risk, that chance that you may not be telling the truth. You try again, a bit more firmly this time, and it's then that she finally lets you get back onto your feet - but she does not let go of your arm, her fingers curled around what's left of your sleeve.

You refrain from saying anything else as you ignore the luster of the Muramasa a few feet away - and a quick racking of the Shield nets you a Glock 17 with an extended magazine. it's a fully-automatic one, from what you can see - and you carefully, slowly, pan the firearm around you.

The bears are gone. What's left of them are...well, lying in pieces around the clearing. Mostly your handiwork and Midori's, with some help from Kharn. The forest itself is quiet; not even the telltale roar of Malal to break the silence.

You offer your bloodied arm to Midori to hug tighter to herself - and it's then that you try to raise your former partner on her frequency.

You murmur her name into the dead, static-laden channels a few times before you get a response. An exhausted-sounding response, but one nonetheless.

"Murderface? You are still alive?" A guffaw. "Then truly we are reunited! I was dreading that you have gone much too soft, and fell prey to the Enemy!"

You refrain from mentioning that it almost came to that. Instead, you ask her where she is, so you can link up and get the hell out of here.

"Up further north from the clearing. ...Hnn. You are in right path, I think. Just go straight." A sigh from Kharn, and then another laugh. "This has been a bothersome day, but it has seen me with yet another addition to my collection. Another one for my throne - but haha, who makes a throne out of skulls, Murderface? It does not sound stable at all, and you need quite a lot to even make the simplest stool! Plus, comfort! How can you sit with all those face bones digging into your back, into your ass!"

...Ah. So that's why the bears are gone.

You congratulate her on her new acquisition, and you share that you'll be making your way shortly to her. She agrees, saying that she won't be going anywhere for a while - and it's then that she cuts the connection off.

"I...sempai, I thought I was going to lose you..." Midori murmurs brokenly, clutching your arm tighter. "I...I didn't know what to do, except to hold on..."

You have no reply to that, you find.

You can only thank her, for now. Anything else stills feels much too unfamiliar.

Hey, I just thought of something.

>It's then that the Incubator nods. "Which brings me to my next point. Matsuda, you're right. These things ARE dangerous, and they do corrupt. I would say, given the limited information I have now, that the golden sword itself may have corrupted Kirika. I've been looking at her Soul Gem readings for the past month. Her gem was past the point of recovery, and she had never used a grief seed ever since she registered the sword as her personal weapon. She should have expired long ago, but yet we know how she was when you retired her."

With Kirika somehow coming back from the dead to taunt us in our mind.
Does that mean the Muramasa has become the new housing for Kirika's soul? Do the golden weapons take the victims souls from their soul gems and place it in themselves?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/04/12(Tue)08:35 No.20593427

You are a Magical Girl, and you're not in very good shape.

Not that you've ever been in shape for a long while.

Sure, you can still run fast enough to catch up to a speeding car. You can, if you had enough of a run-up, jump from one skyscraper rooftop to another. You can punch someone hard enough to cave their skull in, you can fire high caliber ordnance without bracing, and you have the reflexes of an ill-mannered rattlesnake.

>>20593427

But you've always felt just a tiny bit sick, somehow. Sluggish. A hot, sticky fever crawling through your veins, sweltering just underneath your skin. Sometimes it's dull and faint enough that you can ignore it, other times it's sharp enough popping enough painkillers to fill a pharmacy doesn't even help a single bit.

It comes and goes, like a soulless, pink-haired demon. Try as they might, not even Kyuubey's smiling, buxom medical staff could figure out what's wrong with you.

Maybe it's the booze. Maybe it's the abuse you've put yourself through catching up.

Or maybe it's just your body trying to destroy itself before you get the chance to.

Strangely, the pain isn't here. Not now.

Hooray!

>> ☐ Deculture 09/04/12(Tue)08:36 No.20593438

It's funny. It should be here, ever present, riding the pulse of your blood, forming networks of hot pain inside you. But it's not - you can't even feel it under the superficial sting of all the cuts and bruises that you received from this botched hunting party.

You don't feel it stiffening your fingers in athritic paralysis like it usually does after a long day of handling firearms. You don't feel it catching in your every breath, that stab of pain whenever you take in more than a shallow gulp of air. You don't see it blurring your vision despite your glasses, you don't taste its metallic tang on your mouth when you swallow the bile threatening to drip down your chin.

All you feel is your subordinate gripping your arm as if her very life depended on it, clutching it with both hands. Holding onto you as the both of you make your way to your former partner's current location, the snow crunching underneath your feet as you make the slow, painful journey there.

You didn't deserve to walk away from that.

No happy endings. Not for you. You don't deserve it.

You find Kharn in another clearing. She is sitting on top of what looks like a toppled tree - the stump that it's been roughly hacked from still burning with an unnatural crimson fire. Wakaba Mirai's body, aptly enough, mirrors the burning stump - her corpse is on its knees, arms hacked off at the shoulders. Slowly burning with the same crimson flame. A blackened hole on her neck where her head should have been.

You smell sulfur and brimstone in the air, as well as the oily smoke of burning flesh.

Kharn doesn't seem to notice, not at all. She doesn't even notice your arrival.

She's much too busy examining her prize - a perfectly-bleached skull, reaved clean of all skin, flesh and gristle.

You clear your throat, trying to work up a smile despite the blood on your face, and ask her if it's Mirai's. Kharn blinks at this, her crimson-pinned eyes focusing on you slowly, before she giggles again.

"Of course it is, Murderface. What, did you think I carry skulls around just to show them off?" She nods at Mirai's slowly-smoldering corpse. "I have taken what I wanted from her, except for that swordfight. She was no challenge." She sniffs. "Well, she did hobble me a bit, but that is to the extent of her abilities. I am left...unsatisfied."

...Well. Hopefully she gets hers when the next crazy bitch comes around to shank you.

"Hah! I am still waiting for that day. Hopefully it does not take too long before it does, eh?"

Kharn coughs rather wetly into a clenched fist, before spitting blood into the snow again. "Sometimes, I get tired of living. But then things happen, and I feel like it again." She laughs, before patting the log she's sitting on. "Come, the both of you! Let us sit here and enjoy the afterglow. Our unexpected guest is providing us warmth and light, let us not begrudge her of her final gifts." She gestures to the gruesome human bonfire kneeling in front of her. "What was her name, again? I am forgetting."

"M-Mirai," Midori whispers beside you, pressing her face against your bloody sleeve. Apparently unable to look at what Kharn had done to the remains of what was once her friend. "Wakaba Mirai, M-Miss Valnikov."

"Wakaba Mirai, then." Kharn twists her smile into a scowl as you make your way towards the toppled log, leading Midori to it as well - and it's with rather shaky legs that you lower yourself onto the natural bench. "I will have to ask you to write her name on the underside of her jaw, I think. I am not good with Japanese writing." She places the bleached skull on her lap, and leans back. "I have called for reinforcements, already. They will be here momentarily."

Some good news, at least.

What do you do at this point in time?

[]Ask Kharn about her skull-taking hobby.

It hurts less every time. Instead of a harsh stabbing pain inside every time it happens it's just more dull throbbing pain that never lets up. At first it's like hitting a stone with a hammer but after a while it becomes a river washing over it, slowly but surely eroding any defenses you put up.

After long enough you builds a dam for it, and the pain slowly accumulates, sometimes seeping out from small gaps, until eventually it all bursts and you break.

You spend a few moments in relative silence before turning to look at your shivering subordinate, who still has quite the iron grip on your arm. She's deathly pale, and her lower lip is quivering - but she doesn't seem to have any plans of letting go of you. You also get a closer look at the gashes on her arms - and suffice to say you're quite positive that bear claw wounds should not be that clean, nor cut that deeply.

For fuck's sake. You've really done it this time, haven't you?

Chiaki "Murderface" Matsuda, ladies and gentlemen. Ruining everything she touches.

You ask her quietly - finding yourself horrified at the dull scratchiness of your own voice, like you've shouted yourself hoarse - if she's alright, if she needs healing. You know how to seal wounds, at least, until she can get proper medical attention.

She shakes her head, murmuring that she'll be alright. She says your name a moment later, grip tightening on your arm.

You let her be, and it's then that you turn to look at Kharn, who seems to be making her new skull talk, wiggling the lower jaw up and down. You call her attention, and ask her where Mirai's soul gem is.

"Ah, do not worry. Usual protocol, yes? Collect enemy soul gem for interrogation. I have it." She reaches into the depths of her coat to draw out an orange soul gem, almost deep amber. The gilding is decidedly different from yours.

"We have a device in the lab which should help us interrogate her. A surrogate body, I think if I am using the term correctly." Kharn tosses the soul gem up into the air before catching it with her clawed fingers. "Although, for what she has done, I am tempted to simply crush it and let it be. But I will not do it, because you may want to ask her questions of your own." She shrugs. "What she said to me before I took her skull was very interesting."

It's then that she smiles at you, a secret smile, one that you find yourself irrationally hating for some reason. However, that smile falls, and Kharn hobbles over to you, quick as a flash - and you find your face being grasped by clawed, metallic fingers as cold as death and twice as sharp.

"...Murderface. You are tainted. Your eyes are tainted. It was not like this earlier, before." Kharn says, her brow furrowing, and you smell the acrid scent of blood on her breath. "How did this happen? Did you use one of the golden weapons during the battle, earlier? Why did you not tell me about this...?"

"N-no, Sempai isn't...isn't like that..." Midori weakly protests, trying to pull you back.

How do you respond?

It's pretty obvious what happened, lying won't get us anywhere.

First cigarettes, keep our calm. Stick one in Kharn's mouth as well.

Midori was out of ammo, I passed her my weapon, retrieved a weapon from shield, it was the golden sword, enemy was too close, dropping the sword and retrieving another weapon would have led to subordinate death and/or getting golden desert eagle, killed bear with sword, former owner of katana's voice spoke to me, told her to fuck off, dropped katana.

Kharn narrows her own midnight-black, crimson-pinned eyes as she stares right into yours - and there's enough sunlight left to let you see your own face reflected in her lightless orbs. It's...not a pretty sight, all told. You're a mess, and your own black eyes aren't doing anything much to help. YOu clear your throat, and tell her exactly what happened - minus the bit about Kirika, of course. She probably doesn't need to know that.

It's only after a few moments that Kharn releases you, shaking her head and letting out a sigh. "...It truly has taken you, I see. I was hoping that this was not the case, you know, Murderface? I was hoping that it was only to safeguard you against the golden things, not to try and retard what is already there."

It's then that she takes a flask from the inside of her coat, uncapping it delicately with her elongated, skeletal fingers - and she takes a healthy pull from it, before tossing it to you. "Drink it. The darkness is heavy, this time. It will take some time for it to clear, but it will. For now, do not touch any of them. It is forbidden." She nods to Midori. "You. Ensure that Murderface does not play the silly buggers with us. Do not let her play with her golden toys. Alright?"

Midori nods at this, her own eyes wide, and pulls you closer to her. She's still shivering, and you feel her slowly going cold beside you.

"I will not let this cast a shadow on our reunion, though. Souji and I will fix you, that I am sure." Kharn says as she takes her place back on the log, grinning. "The treatment will work. I will not rest until it does."

You take a moment to gently and carefully pull your arm from Midori's grasp - and you're treated to the tearful, almost heartbroken look your subordinate gives you as she feebly whimpers in protest. You recognize this display as someone slowly slipping into shock - and it's not a pretty sight, considering the contrast of how she was only a few hours earlier. Oh, and the fact that it's all your goddamn fault.

You curl your arm around her waist - eliciting a weak gasp of surprise from your green-haired subordinate - and it's then that you pull her as close to you as you can, making her body press against yours. Sharing what little warmth you had at that moment, warmth you try to resupply by drinking very deeply from the flask Kharn offered you. Despite your own mouth tasting like clotting blood right about now, your first dose of alcohol for quite some time now could not have tasted better. It goes down nice and easy, and you could have drained the entire flask if you wanted to, with only the thought that Kharn may want some stopping you from doing so.

"S-sempai..." You hear Midori murmur against your collar, her head leaning against your shoulder, and you merely squeeze her gently in response. Hopefully, she'll get the idea and rest instead of making you have to say it. This doesn't need to get any more awkward between the both of you.

You clear your throat, and ask Kharn quietly about the treatment itself. What they're going to do to you to stop this reaction you're getting from the Golden Weapons.

"Oh, it is painful. Very painful. It is nothing I would wish on my most annoying enemy, Murderface. The pain is unlike anything you will ever feel. You will want to claw your own heart out of your chest before it finishes."

She says this with a playful grin on her face, which makes you ask her again, but to not screw around this time.

"It is a generally simple procedure." Kharn shrugs. "It is a two-pronged process, what we have. If the first does not work, then we will have to use the other. The first is painless, and is generally easy, but is a temporary fix. The second..." Your former partner smiles, before glancing down at her hands, at her brutally-clawed fingers glinting blackly with malevolence. "...it changes you. That is all I am allowed to say, seeing as the one who is asking is not fully ratified as Warmaster yet."

You open your mouth to protest at this, but Kharn shakes her head, her long black hair flowing behind her. "Stop the questions and be patient, instead. We will be doing the treatment tomorrow. I am thinking that this incident pushes it up a bit in schedule, yes? We will begin the day with it. Hopefully by then, your darkness will have receded." She nods at you, smiling. "It will be nice for you to spend at least one last night in someone's arms. If we resort to the second method, it will be a month before you wake up."

>SPECULATION TIME!

I would guess that the first method involves imbuing a resistance to said corruption after clearing it out. Sort of like giving antibiotics; it works beautifully to kill bacteria if you take all of it, but it will probably not work well on any bacteria that survive it.

The second one would probably be a drastic alteration of Chiaki's very being. Seeing how Kharn reacted to mentioning it, I would guess that it would somehow make the corruption a fundamental part of Chiaki, rather than an invasive influence. If this is true, Chiaki can still be very corrupted, but it won't impact her mental faculties or personality an awful lot. She may even draw even greater strength from it. But in doing so, I'm going to guess that it's going to leave some very conspicuous marks on her. Like metal claws and conspicuous black eyes with glowing-red pupils.

You frown at Kharn at this, before turning slightly to check your subordinate's reaction. Thankfully, Midori seems to have gone to sleep, her breaths warm against your cheek. You gently shake her awake, reminding her that she has to stay conscious until the reinforcements arrive - and she murmurs something that makes you feel all the warmer.

"I...I wouldn't mind if it's you, sempai..."

Kharn's snorting laughter could not any be more out of place, and you crouch down to grab a fistful of snow to fling at her. It connects, exploding in a powdery mess all over her hair, but she laughs still, startlingly-clear laughter that sails above the crackle of a Magical Girl's corpse being slowly roasted in an impromptu bonfire.

You grumble an epithet towards her, before disobeying your own advice and closing your eyes. You're...tired. Very tired. Maybe just rest your eyes a little bit...

Your former partner's laughter fades, along with the sound of a metal giant stomping into the snow, venturing ever closer. Accompanied with the guttural snarl of a truck engine.

This time, you dream of nothing. Just an endless, lightless void, swallowing you whole.

And you're somehow all right with that.

You creak your eyes open, squinting at the harsh fluorescent lighting coming from the ceiling, and you reach up to rub the grit caking your eyelids. Or rather, you try to, but your right arm is...numb, somehow. You can't feel it or move it - something seems to be weighing it down.

...Did Kharn just fucking take your arm off? Was this what she was trying to tell you about that second method? Did the Betrayer finally make her move and turned you into her personal gimp--

You open your eyes a bit wider, and you realize that you're in bed with Midori again.

And the both of you are not wearing any clothes.

I usually like to give the calm rational suggestion to a scenario, but there are few ways to take this that are not bad.

So I have laid out a 7 step plan:
1) Resist urge to murder.
2) Ask what happened while you were unconscious.
3) Resist Urge to murder a little harder.
4) Ask where our clothes are, and why Souji is watching two naked girls sleep.
5) We really shouldn't murder him, he's doing the treatment. So don't murder him.
6) Process this information in a rational matter and decide on a more informed course of action.
7) At no point in the process do any murder.

You know, two things, Guys.

1. If they somehow have a procedure against the Corruption of Golden Weapons, Chiaki pretty much knows right now what we knew thanks to the Mami-Flashback: This happened before AND not only does QB know about it, he knew about it to such an extent that they devised countermeasures against it. In short: QB fucked us over. Again.

2. There was never any need for QB to test the corruption of the Golden Weapons. Never. He already knew about it, what means that him forcing the Golden Shit on us seems like him having a much bigger agenda than just "Test them." Something is seriously off. Does he expect us to first get corrupted by them and than after realize what we have done to witch out?

3. Demand Explanation from Kharn. How does she know about this. Is this what happened to her.

4. If there is a process for "decorrupting" us how come there isn`t a reliable process for NOT TURNING MAGICAL GIRLS INTO FUCKIGN WITCHES since Grief-Seeds only seem to work partially.

I think Chiaki herself is at a point where she really should start to demand answers because this shit does not fly.

It's only after a long while of the both of you staring sullenly at each other - the stony silence between you broken only by the soft sound of Midori's deep, even breathing - that you grumble out a rather crude, if rather crudely-worded invitation. Sounding completely the opposite as you say it, making it damn well clear that you will break every bone in his body if he so much as thinks about taking you up on it. He merely smirks at this, and it's then that you add the second barb - and he noticeably flinches at this, this time frowning.

"Cute." Is all he says, before turning his attention back to the doujin at hand, flipping to the next page. "You probably shouldn't call the guy who's going to be handling your treatment tomorrow as some jerk who lusts over his younger sister, you know. Anything involving soul gems are pretty tricky. One wrong move, and we'll be sweeping up the remains of your soul in a dustpan."

...Well. The guy has a tongue, you suppose. You let that one slide - as much as you hate to admit it, he's got the advantage on you - and you ask him to get you something hot to drink. Coffee, perhaps. Spiked with vodka.

"What am I, your secretary?" Souji snaps, but it's obvious that his heart isn't into it - and he slowly gets up from his seat, dropping the doujin on his chair. "Fine, just stay there. Don't move around too much or your bandages'll tear away." He lets out a sigh, before walking towards the door. "Don't wake up your friend, either. Let her sleep it off. She's been through a lot of trauma."

2 he may have been testing them for potency or our reaction to them, if we had turned Kirika from the start then maybe the treatment would have been useless

3 possibly we caused her to get metal limbs possibly that was part of her treatment possibly it was punishment for whatever she took the blame for us for

4 different system and it isn't in Kyuubey's interests.

>3. Demand Explanation from Kharn. How does she know about this. Is this what happened to her.

This, when we get the chance I think it'll be very important towards understanding what Pinky is doing.

We know that Golden Weapons have been appearing before we arrived here, suggesting that this world was either:-

a) being cultivated for something, and that we randomly showed up
b) being cultivated for something, knowing that we would show up or being planed explicitly because we were going to show up
c) we came here originally because something was being cultivated here

It's out of the question to assume that our presence and the Golden Weapons are completely unrelated, as Pinky has told us they're related to us (not that you can discount her lying). What the connection is though, remains a mystery. I'm not satisfied with the 'scavenger hunt' explanation.

Regardless knowing what the real history is here could shed light on many questions, and right before we go into treatment is the perfect time to answer.

Wrap your arm around Midori, carefully, not to wake her up. Just that, nothing creepy! Check how bad is the condition of her arms.

Looks whether your phone is within arm's reach. Calling right net to sleeping person would be rude. But we might send some texts.

I get the feeling that Chiaki might not quite know what to do with this whole 'love' and 'lust' thing. The only people around that seem to be throwing themselves at her, though, seem to be girls, so... I guess she's into them, right? That's how this whole thing works, right? It's not like she has any practice with it, so if girls are into her, that must mean she's a lesbian, right?

Murderface, on the other hand, likely had no use for people outside of the occasional drinking buddy, and would certainly not want to get attached to anyone.

And Homura, if we actually were once her at one point, was full on Madokasexual, so that doesn't really help us now.

You glower silently at the door that had protected Souji at the last moment from your well-aimed projectile, before letting out a sigh and touching the gauze covering your cheek. If there's anything you really despise about this job, it's the moments that you spend in recovery, all bandaged up like some sort of invalid.

That's not to say you mind bumming out or just spending an entire day drinking wine and watching TV and doing absolutely nothing in the way of being productive - it's just that being inactive as you wait for your injuries to heal means, to you, that you were not good enough to get it right the first time, so to speak. There were snags. There were setbacks. You let yourself get mauled by a bear. That sort of thing.

Well, nothing for it. You lie back on the bed, ignoring your self-consciousness nagging you to pull the blanket back up to your chest as you wait for Souji to come back with your coffee. Being chaste isn't something you're really good at or care about much. Of course, you have your own sense of privacy and modesty, but it tends to get shoved neatly to the side with more important things. Work-related things.

Also, she's already showed up on Pinky's radar. She was IN THE ROOM with Iori, Midori, and us during the rapeshow.

If we forget about her in Garcia's hands, I highly, highly doubt that she'll be gone for good. She'll be back, just in a way thats the worst possible outcome for us.

The ONLY way to protect her is to get her close and push all the bad things away ourself.

Manually.

Soft. Very soft.

And yes, she's bigger than you. Two sizes bigger, at the very least.

It's...it's almost as if Mami was here in the bed with you.

You stop comparing as soon as you hear the doorknob rattle. Souji comes in with your coffee, grumbling about something, and you try to act as if you haven't been nearly caught groping your own subordinate.

Why do you do these things to yourself?

"Coffee. Black. No sugar. Vodka." The young man intones in a rather irritated voice, placing it on the bedstand nearest you, before taking his place back on the chair. The book you bought him being flipped back to where he let off. "Drink it while it's still hot. I'm not going to make you another if it gets cold."

You sit up carefully, ensuring that this time the blanket doesn't drop below chest height for you, securing it underneath your arms - and it's with a furtive, bandaged hand that you take the cup of steaming brew. You give it a hesitant sip, and frown at the bitterness of the coffee mixing with the alcohol. It tastes horrible, but at least it's warm.

You drain the last of the coffee - not caring if it burned its way down your throat - before placing the cup back onto the bedside table and then transforming, right under the sheets. There's a palpable snap of electric charge in the air, a release of energy that makes the blanket covering you billow out slightly - and it's then that you carefully extract your arm from under your sleeping subordinate.

Shooting a glance at Souji to make sure he's not sneaking a peek, you lift the blanket slightly to take a look at Midori's injuries - they seem to be confined to her arms, although she is sporting what looks like a nasty cut in her stomach. Puncture wound, probably, considering how the same spot on her back is bandaged up, too.

...Well, despite your doing your level best to inadvertently hack your subordinate to pieces, it seems she's doing fine and on the way to recovery. You slip off of the bed, slowly and carefully, remembering to fill the gap you've left with your own pillow. Besides this, you make sure she's tucked in, with no chance of the blanket inadvertenly revealing anything incriminating to the one sitting vigil.

You finally straighten up in your fresh new costume. It's a new one, as your Soul Gem is wont to create a pristine copy with every time you transform. Again the pantyhose hitching a bit too high up for comfort, but you'll adjust that later. Your shield heavy on your right arm, you pat the unreliable little bastard - before giving Souji a gruff word of thanks as you make your way out.

"No problem." For once, Souji doesn't sound like he's sneering. Or having a thousand dicks in his mouth. "Thank you for getting Misaka back here safely. For the second time."

You stop momentarily in your tracks at this, before nodding silently. All you get from him is the turning of another page of the porn he's reading, and you clamp down on the impulse to punch his very punchable face as you make your way to the elevator - and consequently, topside.

The trip is short, uneventful, and by the time the elevator doors slide open, you realize that you've been unconscious for quite a while. Sunlight had come and gone, and the night sky is a rather peaceful, if star-filled one. The courtyard where everyone got prepped for the bear hunt is somewhat empty, except for a few soldiers gathering around fires - the rest seem to be patrolling outside.

Your former partner and good friend, Kharn, is at the very center of the courtyard, as usual. She is attending to a very large and very active grill,the coals inside smoldering red with heat - the aluminum racks heaving with thick slabs of greasy bear meat, each one sizzling as they cooked. The process itself is making quite the plue of smoke - Souji is right, it does present a rather unique stench. But most of that seems to be hidden with a careful - or liberal - amount of spices involved, and you can faintly smell crushed garlic and pepper in the roasting aroma.

Not a bad dinner to wake up to, you think. You call Kharn's attention, and she turns to you, all smiles. Showing off the apron she is wearing over her clothes - the kitschy words 'Kiss The Chef' embroidered on the pink material.

"Ah, Murderface! I was worried you were going to sleep through dinner!" Kharn greets you, a grease-covered spatula held delicately with her claws. "Very sorry if you woke up without any clothes and just bandages, Midori was in a very bad way, and she needed...body warmth, you know? Skin to skin. Could not help it." Kharn shrugs helplessly, although you can tell by the way she's grinning that she's not exactly being truthful here. "Ah, but it all works out, I am imagining! I made sure Souji is also there, in case emergency things are needed. He is doctor, too, besides being scientist, you know?"

Well, you didn't know that, but you tell Kharn that there's really nothing between you and Midori. Nothing at least on your end, anyway.

"Ayah. Do not presume to tell me these things, Murderface, I know you," Kharn brandishes the spatula at your direction, clicking her tongue in mock admonishment. "You say one thing, and mean the other. Do not think it works on me, we have spilt enough blood and killed enough souls together. I would like to think that offers us a unique understanding of each other, yes?"

That's all well and good, but isn't she forgetting that you don't remember a thing about the time you spent together?

"Of course that is in put into consideration!" Kharn says, blinking, before the grin comes back on again. "I do not cook simply because I feel like it, Murderface! When I do, it is for a reason!" She points towards a ruggedized cooler next to the grill. "Ah, there, get a drink of your own, and I will start regaling you of tales about our past. You should listen, because I will not repeat it, no matter how much you beg." She flips one of the massive steaks with a flick of the spatula, the large slab of meat making the rack groan.

"I will tell you about the Murderer, the Betrayer, and the Ghost."

Finally. A chance to get a bit of your past life back.

It's just one small chunk amidst thousands, but you'll take what you can get.

I think she has potential to become something more than she is right now. While there is a distinct possibility of her becoming a yandere variant, she also shown to be capable under duress and has a sort of maturity that comes with a lifetime of hardship. She's been burned badly by life and has coped with it by crushing on Murderface, but as Chiaki's subordinate, she'll be exposed to almost every bit of the Warmaster training that Chiaki will experience. As long as she doesn't bury her head in the ground (or in Matsuda's chest) and isn't scarred by everything, she could become a very capable MG.

We just need to make sure that she doesn't turn into Iori 2.0, or the MG equivalent of Petyr Baelish with frightening illusion powers.

Guys, I'm less worried about making Midori into something that inconveniences us(yandere, whatever) and more about just emotionally wrecking a poor kid like her. This is less about self-preservation and more about not being a douchebag.

Besides, not all emotionally obsessive people get "entertaining" mental problems when broken, sometimes they just get depressed and shut down. :|

>> ☐ Anonymous 09/04/12(Tue)17:07 No.20598053

This will be quite a journey for both Chiaki and Midori. Perhaps Midori can teach Chiaki how to be more of a human being while Chiaki provides Midori stability and emotional support. Kind of like what Mami seemed to intend with Iori's relationship with Chiaki, only with less clingy over-protectiveness. As odd as it sounds, I think that Midori has a higher chance of developing a healthy relationship (platonic or otherwise) with Chiaki moreso than Iori, despite the less than auspicious introduction of having her legs shot out from under her.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/06/12(Thu)08:46 No.20619626

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

You were also, back then, the current Warmaster of the Officio Assassinorum. A Magical Girl, judged by her peers as the most powerful, the most capable, the most....everything. Even the Incubator, who is by nature a very strict and exacting judge - recognizes your authority and accepts you as his right hand. Beholden to no one but him. Honored and praised beyond compare.

It is a rather horrible shame, then, that you do not really think much about your position, bellicose as it is. Dangerous-sounding as it is. And how the mere mention of your title lights fires in the hearts of your allies, douses cold fear into your enemies, and...certain other confusing emotions in those that you prey upon when you do not feel like sleeping in an empty bed. Emotions that make them wonder if they're just going through a phase.

No, if you're honest, you're just in it for the fighting.

And the skulls.

>> ☐ Deculture 09/06/12(Thu)08:48 No.20619635

>>20619626

You have never been a prideful soul. You never saw the point, really, of resting upon your laurels, to allow yourself to savor the glories you've brought to your name and rank.

You had always ducked out of award ceremonies, you had always refused to accept the finery and regalia that came with such exemplar performance. If your hands were forced, well, you had always made it a point to deflect the praise to someone else, and if really pressed to accept it, you had always done so - not only with obvious reluctance, but also with obvious humility. After which your award would mysteriously end up in someone else's trophy cabinet, or in a convenient bin.

It's just one of those things you do not wish to bother with. Like paperwork. You've permanently delegated that to your long-suffering friend and aide the moment you took up the position, much to her chagrin. You plan to make it up to her someday, of course, but like any good friend, she bore it with a smile in her voice and a spring in her step. Even with her situation, as regrettable as it is.

Maybe you should take care of your friends more, eh?

In any case. You do not like to dwell upon your victories or your accomplishments. You believe that doing so - even if just for a moment - can rot away your hunger, eroding that need to be better than your last mission, your last fight. You cannot allow yourself to be sated because that path lies complacency, sloth, and ultimately defeat. Hubris is anathema to your efforts, and you will die on your own blade first before you let it corrupt you.

Well, no, maybe you won't. Not really. Perhaps you will just work as a secretary, somewhere. A change of pace is always nice. Maybe a teacher?

You are Valnikov Kharn. Warmaster. The highest-ranking Magical Girl of Kyuubey's Officio Assassinorum, in the city of Mitakihara, country of Japan. You are in your personal quarters - it would be insulting to call it a suite - and it is the early hours of the morning, with the sun just having risen. You are still in bed. You have not slept the entire night.

It is here that you briefly contemplate about giving your father a call.

Beside you, your latest conquest murmurs your name underneath her breath, her unbound blonde hair spilling over the pillow, the mass of flaxen strands mingling with your midnight-colored own. Clasping your right arm close to her soft, warm and clothesless form. A tender, fatigued smile on her lips.

You call to her from behind the door to come in. Yes, people can call you negligent, maybe even slacking off in your duties, but they can never say that you are the sort to put pleasure before business.

No, you have always made it a point to enjoy both at the same time, if possible.

The door opens slowly, respectfuly, and a skull pokes its head in. Well, no, it's not an actual skull - it's a black helmet with the stylized face of a grinning skull painted on the visor, giving the wearer a rather menacing look while completely hiding her face from view. A hand, encased a full-fingered padded glove, peeks from the edge of the door and widens the crack just a tiny bit.

"Morning call, Warmaster Kharn." The calm, vox-corrupted voice comes clearly from the airtight, seamless helmet - certain seams where the mouth should be glowing crimson with every word. A moment more, and your aide finally steps fully into the room - if she minds you being naked in bed with another girl, well, she doesn't show it.

A glowing tablet device is clutched in her gloved hands. "As usual, I've brought your proposed itinerary for today, along with other Warmaster-type stuff you'd probably want to take note of before breakfast is served. Compliments of the Incubator, of course." She bumps the door to your quarters close with her hip, the thick chain there jangling quietly. "Oh, and speaking of breakfast, today is a nice Western one, bacon, eggs, pancakes, and mashed potatoes."

You click your tongue at your aide as you smile at her. She should have known by now about your little hobby of collecting skulls. She should at least respect it by keeping any skull-related paraphernalia out of your sight, unless she wants them added to your little collection. Your aide should just remove her helmet and address you directly, so there will be none of this skull business until you've bathed, dressed and breakfasted.

This earns you a chuckle from behind the skullish helm. "Kharn, as much as I'd like to humor you, I'm not exactly keen on having you or your groupie there being sick all over the place. Housekeeping has already been complaining about how you've been tearing up your sheets as of late. They remind you that while they have a budget specifically set aside for you, replacing satin sheets every time you have someone over is kind of getting annoying. And the curtains. And the mattress. Pretty much everything, really."

The helm's vox unit glows again as she coughs politely into a clenched fist.

"Anyway, let's see. Actionable Item 1, direct from the Incubator: You're required to meet the Third Incubator's Warmaster and her retinue to settle a certain issue regarding the death of three of their Eversor squads. They're understandably irate, so Kyuubey says to use your impeccable tact and judgement regarding this matter." She swipes at the screen again. "This brings us neatly to Item 2 - Girl A, the one who killed those three Eversor squads in what we're currently referring to as an 'unfortunate misunderstanding' in a joint operation - is awaiting your judgment. Kyuubey is trusting you to make the right decision. She is currently in the Silent Room, under heavy guard."

Girl A. The Magical Girl Mami Tomoe, your rumored future successor, rescued from a Witch's Nightmare six months ago. She had risen from her coma a month after that, with...no memory of where she was, who she was, and how she came to be stuck in such a dreadful place. Of course, Kyuubey's immediate reaction was termination, but Mami Tomoe lobbied furiously to induct the girl into the Officio, to have her join their ranks. Killing her then, the blonde had reasoned, would be putting all their efforts to waste.

You remember being amused by her spirited defense of the girl, who, during the proceedings, merely held Mami's hand, staring quietly at nothing, her long black hair almost touching the floor. Cold, uncaring, unfeeling. Detached. As if the proceedings did not concern her in the slightest. It was around that point, too, that Kyuubey asked for your counsel - and you'd been in the middle of imagining how Tomoe would sound like in the throes of orgasm when he did.

You ruled in favor of keeping Girl A around, and you remember Tomoe smiling at you gratefully through her tears. You had dinner with her after, of course, but nothing really came out of that. Well, you did get a small kiss on the cheek, and you tried to press the issue, but she rebuffed your advances - saying that she wasn't really that kind of girl.

You drank yourself to sleep after that, with your aide trying her best to cheer you up.

It's funny. Your first time being rejected. You never got over that.

Well, it might be a surprise to people who are used to video games where there's always something there to balance the usage of timestopping abilities, or in stories where there's some obvious huge downside that keeps it from being abused. So not everyone may realize the extent of what a broken ability it is, and probably why it was Homura's ONLY ability.

Except for Kyouko's little hug stunt being a wrench in the works, the Madoka anime made it pretty obvious that Homura could probably mass-murder any other magical girl if she chose. Hitting the soul gem on a frozen target isn't exactly rocket surgery.

It wasn't an accident, it was an "unfortunate misunderstanding" during a joint operation.

Remember this is Murderface, pre-Chiaki Murderface. When she was nigh-emotionless except for pent up rage. Bitches probably got in between her and the job and/or her cigarettes and pills.

It's impressive what you can do with high caliber weaponry and military grade explosives when you have functioning time stop.

"...If you'll direct your attention back at me instead of the ceiling, Warmaster, I'll go ahead and mention the last item, that being a missive from the Fourteenth Incubator. He's asking if Miss Nero, his Warmaster, made it to her flight back last night, as she has not yet turned up in the country as of this morning."

"Hnh," you hear yourself say, apropos of absolutely nothing. "That...that is interesting question. I, uh, um..."

Your friend and aide, Malal, laughs softly from behind her helm, and you hear her smile in her voice.

"I'll let the Fourteenth Incubator know that you have no idea where she is, then. Oh, and I'll have the chef make something Italian. We can just go through your itinerary after breakfast." She taps something on the tablet's screen, before clenching her right hand and touching it above her breast, her personal salute to you. "Warmaster."

With that, she leaves your room, closing the door gently behind her. The Fourteenth Incubator's Warmaster - Nero - cuddling up closer to you, murmuring something romantic-sounding in her melodramatic tongue.

What do you do?

I think the very last thing that Chiaki could handle would be a loss of control like that.

If you look at her relations with everyone else we have clear lines of what is allowed and what isn't and we guard those lines pretty strongly. Our relationships with people while most of the affection comes from the outside we regulate how much comes in and as is shown by Iori push back when it exceeds those lines. We guard our control over our life and what we let into our life very carefully. We do this because we know that without extreme control we're likely to whisky-pancake ourself all the way down to rock bottom or start slaughtering things. It's one of the reasons we hold our professionalism so high.

So back to your question. My personal opinion is that we'd freak out, especially if there wasn't anything we could do about it. Panicking, emotions that we've bottle up, as much violence as we could summon up.

I think Midori could pick it up pretty easily, she knows what feels good, she can apply her own experiences to making Chiaki feel good. She's also enthusiastic which means a lot.

I'm not thinking Chiaki could do that well in reciprocating. Ignoring her complete unsuitability for relations and close intimacy, she doesn't seem like the kind of girl who really paid any attention to masturbation, any of the theoretical aspects of sex or anything like that. She doesn't have a foundation to work from, unless of course she retains some relevant know-how from the times in her life that she's forgotten.

>Midori
>Anywhere near Yandere

I don`t even think you know what Yandere means. Heck. I don`t even think you know what "Obsessive" means. I`ve seen quite a fair share of Girls that are obsessive about you and Midori is pretty much nothing like that.

Yes, she is fangirling around. No fucking surprises there if you consider that the person who she considered her Idol defeated her, but instead of splattering the wall with her, give her another chance.
And then there is the thing that Chiaki gave her an orgasm by accident and for somewhat "normal" girls where sex is more of a mind-thing and tied to emotions, this doesn`t exactly scream "She is not interested in me".

What I`m trying to say is: Midori has a crush on us. There is nothing fucking yandere or obsessive about that. If you people relly believe that having a crush on someone ist the same as being obsessed with someone you should get the fuck out more often and probably get a girlfriend, because I`m sure as fuck, that none of you ever had to deal with a truly obsessive girl.

You make your choice, and the young blonde woman in your arms shivers deliciously underneath you as you rouse her from slumber the way only you can. Her emerald eyes fluttering open, her unpainted lips opening in a small gasp as you explore her soft, naked form under your fingertips, tracing slow lines on every surface, pressing gently against every contour.

If only your father could see you now, you muse as you carefully part her milky thighs, despite her feeble, half-hearted protests of being much too sensitive still, down there. If only he could see his only daughter now, once an awkward girl with a hunting rifle and a crippling fear of crowds - now a powerful figure who could do anything she wants, and take anyone she so desired.

He raised you as a Valnikov first and a girl second, all right.

It takes Nero only a couple of minutes to climax, and when she does, she screams your name loud enough that your aide knocks at the door again, asking you if everything's all right.

"It is nothing," You call, after picking a blonde hair from your tongue. "Just, ah, watching the pornos movie! Yes, volume is too loud, I am sorry!"

Malal audibly lets out a sigh, and reminds you that you have thirty minutes until breakfast is served. You hastily yell your acknowledgement, just before Nero curls her arms around your neck and pulls you into a kiss.

"Il mio amore..." She murmurs just as you part, clearly not at all concerned about where your tongue has been. "Kharn, is this how you greet all of your suitors in the morning?"

How do you reply?

"Hn hnn, only the beautiful ones." You say slowly, carefully, making sure to pile on your accent as thick as possible while smiling down on her - the desired effect a blush and a giggle from the italian beauty underneath you. Reaching up carefully with your hand, you brush some strands of hair away from her eyes, tucking them behind her ear, and it's then that you apologize that you have some business to take care of. Loathe are you to tear yourself away from her arms, you simply must get ready for your duties.

Nero simply shakes her head, her brilliant green eyes slightly glazed over with the afterglow from earlier. "No, no, there is no need to apologize. You have your own duties to attend to, as do I. It is our burden, being our respective Officio's best warriors, isn't it?" It's then that her blush deepens as she lowers her gaze upon your form. "I...I admit, I was first taken aback by your impetuousness, addressing me like that in such a manner, but..." Nero lets out a wistful sigh, before looking back up at you with almost worshipful eyes. "Last night, it was my first, and--"

"Yes, yes, it was incredible, out of this world, truly an experience to die for," you cut her off as you place a kiss on her lips to silence her praises. Nero is a lovely girl, and she had accepted your affectations with surprising energy and flexibility, but does she like to hear herself talk. She could talk for hours on end, lecturing you about how to behave according to your station. Calling herself 'Emperor', she was launching into how beastly your manner of dress was until you silenced her the way you did now.

The kiss has its intended effect, and she smiles softly as you withdraw. "Can I see you again, Kharn?"

You crawl off the bed, your bare feet coming in contact with the cold marble tiling of the floor - and just as you head towards the bathroom to begin your preparations, you turn to grin at her.

Your answer makes her smile. Just like all the rest.

Maybe in the future, you will feel bad about lying to all these girls.

Your shower takes you at least twenty minutes. You take your time washing away the vestiges of last night's excesses and then some. Your hair, usually an ordeal to wash, is somehow more cooperative - you suspect that Nero had taken some time brushing it last night, when you dozed off momentarily.

You finish your cleansing rituals, and you are dripping water as you stand in front of your bathroom's mirror.

It is time for the most horrible time of the day. Maybe this time you should not check, huh? It does not help any, really. Your eyes are already black, your irises red. You cannot change that. You will just feel depressed.

Well Kharn is pretty messed up as well, not as fucked in the head as Murderface, but a constant string of one night stands with women, never seeing them a second time or allowing them or us to get attached to the relationship does indicate some pretty serious intimacy issues. Hers seem restricted to the emotional front, and if I'm reading this at all right she wouldn't even really consider sleeping with any of the people she considered her friend due to the disconnect she is placing between sex and closeness.

You look at your own reflection, the glass clouded slightly by condensation - and it's with your false hand that you carefully wipe the smooth surface clear. Malal's finest work, when all was said and done. She'd spent enough time, despite your protests, studying up a particular kind of restoration using magic - one that temporarily hid all imperfection from a specific body part, bringing it to its former state, for the duration of an entire day. This was after quite a lot of desperation - and an abortive attempt to remove one of the parts with Skulltaker. You managed it, yes, but the moment you forced your hand to grow back, there it was, again. Mocking you.

You glance down at your hands - your hands before your stupid wish started turning against you - before clasping them together just as you close your eyes.

You feel your Soul Gem manifest itself between your fingers, and, still keeping your eyes shut, you place it carefully on the sink. Wincing slightly as the small thorns on the gilding nearly prick your thumb.

You take another deep breath, and open your eyes. Staring down at your hands.

Still the same as yesterday. Your fingers a pure, midnight black, along with the plam of your hands. Bright red veins glowing underneath the skin in some places, spidercracks on a perfect sculpture. The last time you checked, both of them ended neatly at the wrist - now the darkness is encroaching past that, creeping upon your lower arms.

It is always a matter of perspective, you think.

But it is getting harder to take solace from it as you see yourself slowly turning into a monster.

You are Valnikov Kharn, Warmaster.

And as far as you know, you are the only Magical Girl who turned into a Witch - and then, through sheer force of will, fury and bloodthirst - turned herself back.

You make it sound like sound like there isn't a catch, or circumstances that make this something Chiaki can't hope for.

Or would ever WANT to hope for. (Hint, all the glaring hints of FAUSTIAN BARGAINS ERRDAY all up in this bitch.)

Given how Kharn's been spitting up blood at treating Chiaki like she's going to die and wants to forgive her/not tell her she's dying, it ain't a permanent solution by any means. And when she snaps, we may be looking at something worse than another gold weapon user.

No, there was something odd about that Witch. It referred to Chiaki as 'Homura', something only Pinky does, and it didn't have a barrier.

Walpurgis doesn't use one, on account of strength, or maybe because it's a 'gathering of witches', but Kriemhilde Gretchen does and she's MUCH stronger.

Also, remember that Kyouko got pulled into a barrier immediately when Oktavia von Seckendorf appeared.

That the first witch didn't use a barrier is extremely odd.

Doubly so because its noir, this means:

>Midori will die, it doesn`t matter if approach her or not, she will die anyway.
>Kyoko will fight us because we`ll find out something our Incubator doesn`t like or he`ll decide that we should be retired before we expire.

Hmm... Hey, how was Faust's Grief Seed described as? Visually, I mean?

I'm going to go reread until I read the description, but I'm already suspecting that the cometary/moon-sized Grief Seed appeared black and red, I think.

What if Faust isn't a Witch, exactly, but a Magical Girl who went Witch, then turned back, and hasn't been the same ever since?

>>20623494

One thing that I'm wondering about is if it's even correct to assume that Pinky/Faust is "alive". If she has a grief seed active, that means that she was killed off sometime in the past. This can play into the Golden Weapons, which are a way for her to gather her strength to reform back into the world.

But if she's powerful enough to have become a concept or a being of a higher plane, then why is she even bothering with all this? Why not just stay silent/sleep and gather energy until she's ready to fully ascend?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/08/12(Sat)09:20 No.20645072

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

Back then, however, you were beginning to doubt if that title still applied to you.

Throwing up black, clotted blood whenever you so much as transformed kind of puts the entire Magical thing up for debate, really.

Not to mention turning into an actual Witch a few months back. A sordid affair that had you coming to in the middle of a massacre, sitting upon a mountain of severed heads. Sitting there like a king upon his...classy king chair, for kings. Made of severed heads. The concept is lost to you at the moment, but the point was, somehow, you turned back, to the surprise of everyone including yourself.

As lucky as you had felt then, you sure do not feel as lucky now.

You are Valnikov Kharn, the current Warmaster of the 9th Incubator. You've just begun your day giving the Warmaster of the 14th Incubator a toe-curling orgasm. She was very happy about it, smiling that very beautiful smile she should really show more often. You could barely recognize her from the huffy young woman in the rather flashy crimson dress from last night, loudly lecturing anyone who would even dare strike up conversation with her.

In fact, she had been so annoying that you had almost passed on the chance to introduce yourself to her, even with your well-known fetish with blondes. You were still quite sore over Tomoe Mami, back then, and all you wanted to do was maybe drink a little bit and just laze around in bed. Malal had to literally drag you from your sulking chair to where Nero was, and told the blonde young woman that you had a few views of your own regarding the proliferance of fraternization of Magical Girls between Officios.

The rest, as they say, is history. And Malal was right, it did make you feel a little better. And Nero was a nice girl, all in all. She even tasted right.

You should thank Malal for this, like you should thank her for a lot of other things. A whole lot of other things that she had gone beyond simply being an aide for.

You're not sure where you would be without your aide--no, your friend.

Wherever it was, it would be in a very bad place.

With that said, you are now currently transformed. Which means that your hands - and your feet, up to mid-thigh - are now living black fleshmetal. Yes, fleshmetal is not a real word, but it's metal, it's sharp, and you can feel everything through them, as if they were skin instead of...well, metal.

Your legs are the same spindly structures, elegant in their own right, with certain pointy things jutting out at the knee and toes. Your hands, well, they look like they belong on some giant metal skeleton model, as that's what they are: oversized steel simulacra of the human skeletal hand, all black, and the tips forming into brutal claws.

You've wondered how your wish could have possibly been interpreted into giving you these sort of armored appendages, but they are as useful as they are...appealing, so you do not wonder so much, anymore.

It's only ironic that your normal limbs, out of transformation, actually look much more horrible. Here, at least they realize that it is simply due to your costume, but your hands and feet when you're normal, well...they are not exactly standard issue.

You clap your brutally-clawed hands against your cheeks. Stop, you murmur to yourself. This is no time to be bothered by trivialities. Work must be done. Professionalism. You are a professional.

You carefully button up your black greatcoat - a present you inherited from your father, from his days in the army - the Warmaster skull epaulettes glinting from the garment's padded shoulders. The Warmaster's cap comes on last, and you carefully pull it down so that the visor is barely obscuring your eyes while not making a mess out of your hair. Nobody wants a Warmaster with a bad case of hat hair.

You glance back at Nero, and she is still sleeping the sleep of the blessed, entangled in the satin sheets of your bed. Nothing wrong with that, of course - your policy is to let whoever it was you've been fooling around with to stay as long as they like, until they find it in themselves to leave. No driving them out and telling them not to call you, you'll call them - that's just bad comedy. Your father raised you better than that.

You turn back to look at yourself in the mirror, before nodding at yourself. You're ready as you can be.

What do you do?

You take this time to check your inventory.

You don't carry a lot with you, and some of the stuff you have you're already wearing. You have your Warmaster cap, which proves your station to anyone in the Officio, and thus your authority over them (it also helps protect your scalp and eyes from the hot sun, a good plus).

You have Skulltaker, your Magical Girl weapon, a very long, very huge and very noisy chainblade that you like to spend long nights maintaining. You have recently replaced its chainteeth, so it is in fine working order.

You also have your smartphone, which you only use to make calls to Malal to - and the remaining handful of Jolly Rancher candies that one of the Officio Warmasters stationed in America had given you. Finally, you have twenty of the wondrously sour things left, and you will be sad when you finally run out of them.

Hmm. What's this strange frilly scrap of cloth in your inventory, here?

You take one of the Jolly Rancher candies and unwrap it carefully, before popping the delightful piece of sour goodness in your mouth. It is as sour as you like it, wonderfully so, and you close your eyes momentarily as an involuntary shiver goes down your spine. Sure, you think the American Warmaster was quite the uncivilized, boorish young woman, but she had certainly taken your heart with these things! You should remember to have Malal look for these things. You do not know what you would do if you run out of them, and because of this, you only have nineteen left.

Letting the treat dissolve slowly on your tongue, you finally make to investigate the frilly piece of cloth. It comes out of your inventory rather reluctantly, as if it caught on something. It finally comes away, unfolding as it does so - and it's a white, silky number, embroidered with a rather vulgar amount of lace. And almost see-through material.

Oh. OH. Right. This is Nero's. You...you made a point of pocketing it at the heat of the moment, after you yourself pulled them off of her. You decide to keep the frilly pair of undergarment as a trophy. Your very first one - you've only recently come upon the idea, after overhearing a blue-haired Eversor explain the used underwear market to an utterly confused (and soon very embarrassed) red-haired Eversor. You didn't catch their names, but you've seen them hanging around with Tomoe Mami. But yes, a trophy collection of your conquests sounds like a good idea, and where better to start than Nero?

You make a note to tell Malal that she should inform the Fourteenth Incubator's Warmaster of this honor.

...Perhaps when she's safely back in Italy, of course.

Walking over and giving the still-somnolent Nero a farewell peck on the cheek, it's then that you finally walk out of your room, closing the door carefully behind you. As always, there are two guards posted near your door, quiet and taciturn. Wearing the same Culexus gear as your aide, down to the skullish helm, the padded gloves, the armored shoulderpads and boots.

"Warmaster." Both of them utter through the vox units of their helmets, the speakers distorting their voices enough that they actually sound exactly the same, from their pronounciations to the digitized edge of their words.

You nod at them, before glancing around. Normally, your aide should have been waiting outside your room, ambushing you with her tablet as soon as you stepped out. The hallway seems to be devoid of Malal now, however.

What do you do?

Both Culexus glance at each other for a moment, and it's then that look up at you, seemingly in confusion. "N-no, Warmaster, neither of us is Malal." The one to your right says, shaking her head briefly. "I am Alpharius, Culexus rank."

Alpharius. Hnh. Well, this is the first time you've had Culexus guarding you, so this is also the first time you're encountering them - besides Malal, that is. You commit the name to memory, and you glance towards the one at the left, asking her for her name.

"U-um." The other Culexus seems to be flustered at you asking her name. "I am Alpharius as well, Warmaster. I am not Miss Malal. Although, I did see her heading towards her own room, she seemed quite distressed about something--ah! Here she is now, Warmaster!"

And so she is. Your aide and friend, Malal, attired in the same Culexus gear as the two guards you've been talking to, makes her way out of her own room - which is beside yours, her being your aide and everything. She closes and locks her door rather fastidiously, as if loathe to take any chances of anyone getting in - and it's then that she waves at you, tablet in hand, before approaching.

"Getting to know your door guards for a change, Kharn?" Your hear the smile in your friend's voice despite the vox-corruption. "That's new. Usually you're much too busy trying to sleep with them." The Culexus at the left seems to fidget at this. "And no, before you ask, none of them are blonde. As far as I know. So hands off."

How do you respond?

"...What? Distress? I'm not--how did you...?" If anything, Malal seems taken aback by your sudden concern of her, and she glances at the two Culexus you've been chatting with. The one that had mentioned Malal's distress fidgets again, and you hear muted clicks issuing between them - a faint audio sign that they are conversing on a private vox channel. After a few moments, the Culexus hangs her head down, her shoulders shaking slightly, and she steps back timidly, as if wanting to resume her post and at the same time take herself out of the conversation.

...Of course, you didn't hear what they were talking about, but you feel that you may have gotten the flustered Culexus in trouble with Malal, a bit.

"You, back to your post." Your aide snaps at the other Culexus, who is quick enough to obey. It seems that Malal runs a tight ship, at least when other Culexus as concerned - you've never seen her act this way towards Eversors or Vindicares, anyway.

It's then that she lets out a sigh, before beckoning you towards her. You approach, and you fall into lockstep with your aide as the both of you make your way to the floor's solitary dining section - where your breakfast should be waiting for you.
She starts talking as soon as the other Culexus are out of earshot.

"I'm flattered that you're worried about me, but there's nothing wrong. Just some personal issues I have to deal with, nothing that should affect my work." The skull on her helm is grinning, completely at odds with her seeming mood. "If you're noticing it, though, then I apologize."

"..." Your aide is silent as you tell her your thoughts, and it's a moment before she breaks the quiet between the both of you. "Kyuubey will find a cure, and soon enough. I hear he's actually devoting a lot of resources into finding one, including the R&D base in Siberia."

Huh. He's doing that? Well...Kyuubey may be more considerate to you than you thought. And here you were, thinking that the Incubator was all about dollars, cents and grief seeds.

In a rare breach of decorum between Warmaster and aide, Malal reaches out to grasp your fleshmetal hand, giving it a squeeze.

Of course, she doesn't do exactly much squeezing, since your hand is all but metal shaped like bone, but the thought was there.

"Dammit, Kharn, that was supposed to be a comforting gesture. How can I be comforting when you've got all that weird shit on your hands? And legs?"

You blithely snap that she does not exactly present a picture of empathy, with her face covered by a grinning skull helm, and being covered from head to toe in black body armor. Her squeezing your hand with a padded glove does not help, not at all.

Your combined laughter carries all the way to the dining section.

Yes, the both of you have problems. Both Warmaster and aide.

But sometimes, you just can't help but laugh at how much the Universe deemed fit to throw at your direction.

Sometimes, laughter is how you cope.

Other times, it's murdering. And skulls.

Breakfast resumes in the quiet dining section. It is simple, but it is private; a circular white table with a comfortable, cushioned seat curving around it, so that others can dine with you if necessary. You tuck in to greasy western food with an alarming gusto; you suppose that Nero did take a lot out of you last night. Might as well carb up for the day.

You offer Malal some of your food in mid-chew, she politely refuses as she continues to consult her tablet.

"Let's get your itinerary out of the way while you eat," Malal says as she swipes one glove-encased finger across the surface of her tablet, before tapping at a specific spot and then sliding the device, face up, towards you. "You have ten outstanding appointments today. I've taken the liberty of marking out the most important ones - those being your meeting with the Third Incubator's Warmaster this afternoon, and your judgment of Girl A in the Silent Room, this morning."

You glance down at the tablet screen. The ones that had gone unmarked are the things you normally skip. These events being motivational speeches by the Human Resource department of the company (where you are also invited to speak in, an abhorrent thing you will never do), sparring duels that you've been challenged into (that you've always turned down, there's no point now that you're Warmaster) and other things you'd really not spend the day doing.

"Now, do you have any questions about your appointments, Kharn?" Malal takes back the tablet, looking up at you - and you see your face reflected on her helmet's visor. You frown at yourself, before delicately picking off a bit of bacon from your cheek.

What do you ask about?

"Of course." Malal swipes and taps and swipes some more at her tablet. "Girl A was rescued six months ago from the Barrier of a Witch identified as Charlotte. Tomoe Mami and Miki Sayaka were the first to respond to her rescue; Alpha Squad was sent along with Kure Kirika to back them up after.

"She woke up after being comatose for three weeks, and has been in the custody of Mami Tomoe ever since. Upon interrogation, we've discovered that she does not know where she is, where she's from and how she got there; she doesn't even know her name or any memory of her own past. She has been confirmed to be a Magical Girl, and her ability seems to be a perfect Time Stop - it freezes time momentarily around her, leaving her targets vulnerable to her attacks. She also seems to have some capacity regarding firearm generation."

Another swipe. "After two months of rehabilitation, she was temporarily approved for probationary service, with the stipulation that she cannot accept assignments unless Mami Tomoe is with her. Her performance isn't exactly anything to write home about, but she's proven to be quite obedient to Mami's commands, and is very handy with all sorts of firearms."

"And you're judging her for this, Kharn. Happened just two days ago."

One more tap, and it's then that Malal turns the tablet to face you. You squint at the device's blank screen, and blink as it comes alive with the video playback of what looks to be grainy CCTV footage of...a wide office area in some sort of building.

[1/2]

>>20647376

You see unfamiliar Magical Girls - three squads of them, with seven girls per squad - noisily march towards the camera, weapons drawn, faces tight with determination. It's then that they stop in their tracks as a girl with long black hair, braided into two thick ponytails, materializes right in front of them, impeding their progress. Girl A. Words are exchanged harshly, and one of the squad leaders move forward to push the girl out of the way.

You didn't even see Girl A move before the squad leader suddenly jerks back before crumpling to the ground, most of her face reduced to gore. As if someone from off screen had taken her.

It happens again. And again. And again. Girl A somehow disappearing out of frame, only to return back to where she was - and a new victim would fall to the ground, lifeless, with some horrific exit wound sprouting from her body, as if they had suddenly just decided to die. No last words, no moments of tearful goodbyes, nothing.

Those who try and attack Girl A seem to overshoot her by completely meters, and they barely have time to register their disbelief before their hands explode, leaving them without hands to get a grip with. Their faces exploding in a bloody shower would be next, or a hole tunneling itself right through their torsos. Without warning or preamble.

The video recording ends with Girl A taking up one of the discarded weapons from the bloodbath around her - a worn bat with its striking tip full of steel nails - and then suddenly braining the last surviving Magical Girl there, someone who seemed to have been begging Girl A for her life on her knees. Her skull cracks at the first hit, then pops like a ripe melon at the second. The corpse flopping to the floor, still twitching - before falling motionless as her murderer crushes her soul gem underfoot.

The video ends after that, and Malal turns her tablet back to her.

"Well, that's the gist of it, mainly. Murder of twenty-one allied Eversors in one mission. Obviously premeditated, as she first murdered their bodies, and then destroyed their Soul Gems immediately after. Can't get much more premeditated than that." Malal lets out a pained sigh. "The Third Incubator wants her head on a platter and her Soul Gem crushed to powder. Kyuubey is undecided, but he's letting you make the decision."

Your aide sighs. "Such a shame, really. Perfect Time-Stop. You don't see that kind of gimmick around, not anymore."

How do you respond?

You thoughtfully crunch on another strip of bacon, before you ask the obvious questions, first. What was the joint operation all about? Where was Mami while this was happening? And finally, what did Girl A say in her defense?

"If I'm reading the dossier correctly, the joint operation was a purging. An entire building, fifty floors, approximately two thousand souls. One of the yakuza groups that the Third Incubator had been working with, but suddenly turned around and kidnapped a few of his girls, trying to hold them for ransom. The Third Incubator's a bit of a sensitive type, so he asked us for help in the purge. Kyuubey sent one squad to help, and that one is Tomoe Mami's."

A tap on her tablet, and Malal continues. "Tomoe Mami was exactly one floor up when this happened. The Third had instructed his three Eversor teams to let our squad get first run of each floor. That resulted in one of ours getting put in the hospital, but she'll be fine." The contempt is clear on your aide's voice. "In her statement, Mami says that she didn't see Girl A make for the lower floor until it was too late. Girl A literally disappeared from under her nose."

You shake your head at this. Ah, the poor angel. To be beleagued by such troublesome companions.

"As for Girl A's defense?" Malal shrugs. "That's what you're going to find out in a little bit, right? Although I did hear in her initial interrogation that she only did it because she heard one of the Eversor Squad Leaders call Mami a...a really bad word. And that after the operation, she'll share Mami with her squad."

You smile at this.

It seems that chivalry is not dead. It just takes other forms.

What do you do? Your breakfast is all but done.

I thought Kyubey was surprised by the physical description of Jyubey? I at least I don't remember Kyubey referring to Jyubey by a number, something that seems to be the case with very other "official" incubator.

In any case, get Malal's opinion on Girl A and then move to the schedule.

Well, either this was just a bad joke made in the /wrong/ company or this was a double cross.

'Magical Girls' getting kidnapped by some chump gangsters? Calling in a team from a rival incubator instead of just slaughtering the fuckers themselves?

This whole thing sounds fishy!

Nothing else for it. We'll just have to speak to GirlA and get the details from her.

I wonder how she and Girl A got along? If Pinky saw fit to bring her up when berating Chiaki on her choice of friends, they must've actually hit it off pretty well once this incident and the whole 'vomit inducing presence' thing got sorted out.

You wipe your lips carefully with the napkin provided, and it's then that you ask Malal what she thinks about this whole thing with Girl A. Sure, you have your own views on it, but you'd like to get a second opinion on the entire deal. After all, that's what aides are for, aren't they?

"...Aides are helping you with logistics and crap, Kharn." Malal says after a moment, shaking her head. "The stuff you're supposed to be bothering with but are just too busy to, being Warmaster. Paperwork. Errands. Gopher stuff. An aide isn't supposed to offer her views on something the Warmaster needs to decide upon, as that could influence her judgment. That said..."

The Culexus looks around, as if to check whether anyone is listening, before leaning closer. "Professionally, it's an open and shut case. No matter her reason for doing so, she killed three allied squads on her own. Killing a friendly is tantamount to early retirement already, Kharn. Sentence her to death, make it quick--" She draws a glove-encased finger across her throat. "--Third Incubator's happy. We're happy, although not really."

It's then that she leans back on her seat. "On the other hand, there's something really fishy about how the Third Incubator and his squads behaved. Also, Magical Girls getting kidnapped? KIDNAPPED? When has that ever happened? Even the weakest Callidus could stab herself out of trouble if she wanted to. Plus, he had three Eversor squads, and the Third still asked for one of ours. We only get by with one squad per purge, for fuck's sake!"

There are inconsistencies, indeed. But does she mean that Girl A should live?

"Professionally, no. But personally...I think she should get another chance." Malal nods after a moment. "I mean, I've had to train some of the Culexus here myself, and they're not exactly from exemplar backgrounds. They're good girls now, but before they were given the suit...ugh." She pats the table in front of her. "What I'm saying is, while what she did was reprehensible...I don't think we should punish her for doing the right thing. She just did it the wrong way, that's all."

The right thing, but the wrong way. You're not too sure about that.

Because you know you'd have gone right for the Third Incubator's headquarters instead, and killed them from the inside out.

You toss your napkin onto your plate, before standing up from your seat. Your legs and feet clanking again as you do so, and you tell Malal that you want to see Girl A, now. Without delay.

She has just proven herself to be much more interesting than originally let on. YOu'll just have to see if it's worthwhile for you to spare her life. If not, then you'll have a new skull for the taking.

It's win-win, really.

Nobody loses. Well, except her.

[]Buy some time. After that we'd have some room to act and figure out where a kid like that got all that skill.

"Sure, third incubator, we could put Girl A on trial and probably execute her for killing your squads, but doing so would admit that three of your eversor teams couldn't take on a single little girl. MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/10/12(Mon)08:18 No.20671486

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

But you weren't just a Magical Girl, back then. You were a Warmaster. THE Warmaster of the 9th Incubator.

This rank holds you above every other Magical Girl in Kyuubey's Officio. You are beholden to no one but him; your authority all-encompassing and absolute. You can take assume direct control of any ongoing assignment or cancel it entirety, should you so choose. You can remand or redirect any order, or replace them with your own.

And should the fancy catch you, you can unleash the entire Officio - a thousand Magical Girls - in a full-on concerted assault to literally wipe out an entire continent. That hasn't been done before, of course, not as far as you can remember - but should you get the Incubator's authorization, the entire payroll is at your command.

When the Warmaster's Hand strikes, it strikes with the force of Walpurgisnacht.

An apt expression, definitely. Nothing on earth would be able to withstand something like that.

>> ☐ Deculture 09/10/12(Mon)08:20 No.20671507

Another privilege that falls under the purview of being Warmaster is, of course, the authority to say whether a Magical Girl lives or dies, should they be held accountable for their sins by their peers. Any Squad Leader, Captain or Rank Master should be able to mete out their own judgments - but the final decision, of whether or not the accused should be left to atone for her sins or simply have their soul gem shattered as the last resort - well, that falls directly upon your lap.

A dubious honor, you've been forced to make that decision a handful of times, already. You don't keep track, but you think you've judged them to the best of your ability. Those you deemed worthy enough to live, you've let go with a stern warning, and the ultimatum that if you saw them again in the same position, you'd kill them with your bare hands, no trial necessary.

Those you've judged as guilty of their sins, sentencing them to death - well, you've made it a point to be the one to carry it out. You're certainly not required to - the Officio has its own share of bloodthirsty executioners, no matter how Kyuubey tries to clean it up with PR - but you've always insisted to be the one to hold the sword, to be the last thing they see when they finally die. It just wouldn't feel right, otherwise. The burden must be yours, and yours alone.

The fact that you get to keep their skulls afterward doesn't really figure into it, of course.

Not at all.

In any case, that aspect of your duties seem to beckon to you once more, with the existence of Girl A and her little...accident with the Eversor Squads of the third Incubator.

You're not sure what to make of it, really, but you find yourself siding slightly with Girl A. Sure, you probably would have just taken the squad leader with the big mouth - and her skull would've made a nice addition to your collection - but there's something delicious about how thorough Girl A was. How methodical her slaughter. The twenty-one Magical Girls never had time to react.

Well, they did, but they never really got anywhere.

You are Valnikov Kharn, current Warmaster, and you've just come to a stop in front of the Silent Room where Girl A is held. Just like your aide had described, the room itself is under heavy guard, with two Culexus standing on either side of the door, each one armed with oversized riot shotguns. Two Eversors - a crimson-haired one and a blue-haired one - block the door itself, their bladed weapons held tight in their hands, clearly itching to draw them en garde.

The crimson-haired one is a bit more negligent in her pose, frowning as she shifts her weight from foot to foot, her spear glinting dangerously in the fluorescent lighting shining from above. In contrast, the blue-haired one is a picture of fastidious perfection, however. Even her swords are impeccably polished, to a mirror sheen.

And to complete the entire ensemble is the flaxen-haired goddess herself, the Vindicare Rank Master and your rumored replacement. She is unarmed except for the distressed look on her face, the dark rings of sleeplessness circling her warm amber eyes. You hear her whisper your name as you come into view, Malal in lockstep beside you - and the rest of Girl A's Guard visibly snaps to attention as you step ever closer.

"Warmaster Kharn." Mami Tomoe's voice, despite her obvious distress and fatigue, is still warm and smooth like honey, and the curtsey she gives you is made flawlessly. "The prisoner, Girl A, awaits your judgment. But before you decide her fate, I would like to make my appeal for her, right now - and I would like to ask permission to speak freely."

Your aide lets out a small sigh at this, and you turn towards her. She doesn't say anything, nor could you see her expression through the heavy tinting of her visor, but you have the strangest feeling that she's annoyed with this entire thing. No, not annoyed...put off, somehow.

You will have to ask her about that later.

How do you respond to Tomoe Mami's request? You can opt to listen to her pleas, or simply ignore her and push forward with Girl A's judgment.

You smile slightly at the expression of firm, if fatalistic determination on Mami Tomoe's face. You're tempted to take advantage of this particular situation - after all, she's made it pretty clear that she's willing to do anything to protect Girl A, including inconveniencing a Warmaster from her duties. That in itself is a violation, you remember, one you're fully justified to punish her for any way you see fit.

Still, as naked as you've made your ambition to get her between your bedsheets, you opt to take the higher path, the harder road. Never let it be said that the Officio's Warmaster left her decisions up to her libido alone - that's quite the ugly way to spoil your legacy, and a sure way to shaming your father. As if he hadn't been disappointed enough in you.

It's after a few moments that you finally reply - and you tell her that you will listen to her appeal, but only after you get the story straight from Girl A, herself. She can join you in the Silent Room You will only make your judgment until you've listened to both of them at length, and no sooner than that.

Tomoe Mami's face brightens at this, beautifully so, and you immediately regret this decision. You have made a grave mistake.

"No takebacks," Malal murmurs quietly to you, as Mami suddenly takes one of your clawed hands and offers profuse thanks. You feel her warm, soft hands on your fleshmetal one, and you wonder if she is just as soft all over.

Yes. No takebacks. Of course. Valnikov Kharn, she is too good for takebacks.

You are so stupid sometimes. Professional, but stupid.

After giving Mami enough time to recover herself, you bid the guards to let you and your retinue pass - and all four Magical Girls on guard duty do so commendably, in strict formation. You see the two Eversors glance at each other, then at Mami - and she nods at them in turn, smiling through her tears. Hmm. You should probably talk to them, sometime, ask them about this golden goddess you're unhealthily obsessing over.

The familiar chill of the Silent Room washes over you as you step through, and you shake your hands at the annoying tingly sensation that seeps into your clawed fingers. You could never get used to that.

The room, besides the prisoner, is empty and unfurnished. It's been recently used, that fact given away by the dried bloodstains at the walls and on the floor. You make a note to have this cleaned - you can't stand filth, not even in cells. Whoever let this grime remain would have to be penalized. You tell Malal to make a note of it, and she does so immediately, tapping letters from her tablet's touch screen.

The prisoner herself is at the farthest end of the Silent Room, chained like an animal. Thick manacles grasping at her wrists and ankles, and one particularly gruesome one encasing her neck. She is held aloft by these chains, and her head is bowed. Her long black hair hanging down her sides, still tied in the thick braids you've seen her sport in the video.

Her Magical Girl costume is filthy as well, the front a dirty, crusting brown. All the blood from her killing spree, you gather.

The doors to the silent Room close with a thud, the multiple locks clicking heavily into place. After that, a choking silence.

How do you proceed?

Just to illustrate how retardidly over powered she is and how far we have to go until we're back on top form.

Powers:
[] Time stop. Ability to stop the flow of time at will.
[] Telekinesis. Power to move objects with the power of her mind.
[] Flight. Limited ability to fly and levitate. (Sometimes accompanies by manifestation of wings)
[] Psychic shield. Able to create wall of psychic energy capable of blocking both physical and supernatural attacks.
[] Healing/Regeneration. Able to instantly repair physical damage to some degree.
[] Superhuman speed and strength. Magically altered body capable of above human physical feats.
[] Functional immortality. Able to regenerate any injury, even regrow/replace entire body if destroyed as long as soulgem survives.

Special Skills:
[] Highly skilled in CQC.
[] Master of armed combat.
[] Expert marksman.
[] Expert with munitions and explosives. (skilled in creating munitions and explosives)
[] Expert strategist.
[] Mastery of all weapons.

Equipment:
[] ALL the weapons. (yes, I mean EVERYTHING)

All of these are demonstrated in the manga and anime. (did I miss any?)

You ask Malal quietly if she is at all conscious, or if the ones who'd captured her had put the boots to her before doing so. Malal replies quietly that Girl A should be conscious, yes. She'd also seen the blue Eversor outside give her a few kicks to the ribs while Girl A was being interred in the Silent Room, as well.

Hnh. You'll have to talk to the Eversor outside about that. You tell Malal to make a note of it, and she does so immediately. You turn towards Mami, and place a clawed finger up to your lips - telling her discreetly to keep quiet. She couldn't have nodded any faster.

Taking a deep breath, you step forward, your bladed feet clanking loudly upon the metal grating of the floor. Girl A dangles quietly in front of you, her face at eye level, her hair concealing her face in shadow. The chains restraining her clinking softly together as you approach.

You frown, slightly. Normally, you'd be able to feel something coming from the girl. Some sort of killing intent, maybe, or perhaps even a hint of her emotions bubbling up to the surface, permeating her like an aura, a stench. This close to her, it should hit you like a sledgehammer.

There is nothing. Absolutely nothing.

The only time you've experienced this is when you first met Malal, and owing to her...condition, that was understandable.

But here...nothing. Just a void.

You shake these doubts momentarily out of your mind and begin to speak, your voice calm and modulated as it echoes in the cold, silent room. You greet her, and in subdued terms tell her that you're impressed with what she'd done - three Eversor squads, all by herself. Beautiful, but unpolished. Inspiring, yet flawed. If only she could see what she could become - instead of the unrefined and graceless creature you now see before you.

You tell her bowed, shackled form that all you see when you look at her face is death. Murder and crusted blood.

You end your words with a request, with a tone that brooks no debate. You tell her to convince you not to punish her in accordance to her crimes. You command her to tell you what happened - for her to defend herself.

You order her to tell you what makes her worthless life worth saving.

Nothing. Cold, utter silence from Girl A.

You frown at this, and step forward, until you are directly facing the shackled girl.

Close enough to hear her labored breathing. Close enough to smell the blood in her breath, the tang of the dried blood on her costume.

It's only after a moment that she replies. Lifting her head slightly - her dark purple eyes, glazed over with pain, hunger and sleep deprivation, peeking out of from behind a pair of crimson glasses. Both lenses sporting hairline cracks.

"She called Mami-san a whore," Girl A murmurs. "They laughed at her like it was some sort of joke." A shallow intake of breath, a weak cough. "I didn't think it was a very funny joke."

"W-Warmaster, I can explain..." Mami volunteers, but you shush her with a glance.

How do you proceed?

You find yourself smiling at her curt explanation of the murders she'd carried out. To you, certainly, this would be enough - but Malal is beside you, as well as Mami Tomoe. Their presence here means that you need to be thorough, at least in this instance. You need to be clear about this, to leave no doubt in your judgement.

Just as well, you think. It is not as if you are in a hurry - and you want to find out more about this 'Girl A' and how she came to deal the Third Incubator's forces such a grievous blow. All by herself, at that.

Reminding Mami Tomoe once more that she must remain quiet as a mouse, you tell Girl A that you agree with her. Calling someone like Mami a whore - that is the most heinous of crimes, a slander from the festering tongue of Beelzebub himself. Who could look at such a beautiful, pure-hearted maiden like Mami Tomoe and call her such? You would have done the same, no question. Skulltaker would have parted that impertinent Eversor's head from her neck before she even heard the chainblade coming. To insult someone so soft, so warm, so fluffy, so irresistible--

Malal coughs politely beside you, while Mami turns away, visibly trying to keep herself composed while blushing as red as a tomato.

...Ah, right. You were getting carried away. You shake your head at this, before directing your attention back to Girl A, who seems to be looking at Mami as well. Was it longing, or something else? You cannot say, for now, but it does look similar to the look the other girls give the blonde one when the think she is not looking.

You call her attention back to you with a clap of your hands, the noise of crashing metal sharp enough to startle Mami. Girl A, however, merely turns towards you, and you ask her to continue her confession. Surely she has more reason than that, you say. Or did she really slay twenty-one souls just because of that comment?

A moment of silence, and it's then that the accused speaks again.

"They were cowards," Girl A murmurs. "They fell back whenever we came in contact with the enemy. Ignored Mami-san when she tried asking for help." A growl underlines her words now, and the chains holding her up rattles just a bit louder. "Laughing. Every single one of them. I didn't want to hear them laughing anymore."

It's then that she looks at you, directly, through the broken lenses of her glasses. Her purple eyes sullen, yet sharp. Dull, yet piercing.

"I don't hear them laughing any more." She says quietly, as if suddenly coming to that conclusion. "I like it better this way."

You turn towards Malal, who only shrugs, as if to say 'hell if I know'.

It seems that your prisoner is a bit uncooperative. She's given you some answers, but not all of them satisfying.

How do you proceed?

You must surely know more than that. It is clear that you are not eager to elaborate on what happened... but keep in mind that you are not the only one at stake here. For such a grevious blow to an incubator, there must be recompense or retribution on our part. Though you may not care what happens to you, it may be that the incubator may demand a full accounting for everyone involved in that incident.

I can only help you, and Mami, as much as you can help me. The more details you provide on the incident, the easier it will be for me to ensure that both of you are safe.

You sigh inwardly at the rather glacial pace this questioning is going. You're really not the sort to play word games with people you need answers from - you're from Russia. Your father managed an entire gulag on his own. He taught you that the best way to make someone talk involves steel nails, a length of good solid wire, and a fresh car battery. Failing that, a selection of excruciation knives, which he himself forged from the steel of a tank's corpse. You still have the set somewhere in your room.

After a moment, you decide to give you a complete report of the mission. From time of insertion to extraction. If she's not feeling up to replying to your specific questions, then perhaps something a bit more broad will get you what you need.

And surprisingly enough, it does. The delivery was a bit more robotic than you'd like, but she describes the mission with quite the attention to detail. Up to the second, she enumerates everything happening - from the rather chaotic breaching of the building's security to each and every kill Mami's squad made in the purging. She even kept track of the kills made by the Eversor squads - and while they did a commendable job of sealing all the exits, them actually doing any actual purging was seldom mentioned by Girl A.

It was when she describes her breaking away from Mami's Squad that her descriptions become a bit more...off. You can't quite place it, but you see her eyes seem to unfocus as she describes, in the same soft, quiet voice, her hearing one of the Eversor Squad Leaders mention Mami in such an uncharitable fashion. She describes, in the same deadened tones, what the Leader said exactly what they were going to do with Mami after they ambush her squad from behind. Mami was to be spared, the rest destroyed as quickly as possible.

She describes how she kills them in short, simple sentences. Stopping time, placing the muzzle of her firearm a hair's breadth away from their faces, their torsos, kill zones that should inflict the maximum amount of pain before death.

The last one was the transgressor. The one responsible for the deaths of her fellows.

It's here that Girl A smiles as she recounts how she forgoed the use of her ability in this kill - instead, she opted to smash the Eversor's brain open with a baseball bat riddled with nails. She notes, here, that it was a very satisfying kill to make.

She then continues on to detail the rest of the assignment, but you stop listening there. You dimly hear her describing how she linked back up with Mami's Squad, and how they purged the rest of the floors by themselves, with the blonde one completely unaware what her charge had done.

...It's a hard story to believe, but what other explanation is there? If Girl A was lying, then this was the most creative lie you'd ever heard. One with video evidence, at that.

You turn to Mami Tomoe, gesturing silently at Girl A with a clawed hand.

"...It is as she says, Warmaster." Tomoe says after a moment, nodding. "Her description of the assignment is accurate. I...we thought it was simply them being thorough on the floors we left as we continued the purge, but they never once came to our aid, even after repeated requests." She shakes her head. "When she linked back up with us, we assumed that she'd gotten lost, and continued our purge despite one of us being injured."

Well. That clears up the picture, some.

How do you proceed from here? Do you judge her now, or ask Girl A a few more questions?

This girl...she is not at all right in the head, you think. Of course, you can say the opposite about a precious few in the Officio, and one of them is standing beside you, wringing her soft, warm hands, the luster of her brilliant blonde hair still enchanting even in the cold, murky light of the Silent Room.

But even then, you cannot help but feel that something horrible had taken place inside this girl's mind...as if it had been savagely torn apart and inexpertly stitched back together. Again and again and again. Forming a bizarre, twisted patchwork that can only reply in cold, hushed tones, and had the stare of someone long dead and simply forgot to lay down.

You ask her, then, that if such a betrayal did exist, then why did she not say that, first? Did she want so badly to die, does she have some sort of death wish that she needs fulfilled? Why her first answer instead of this?

"..." Girl A is silent for a few moments, staring at Mami sullenly. As if trying to convince herself whether to speak or simply ignore the question.

You open your mouth to press her harder when she finally replies.

"Because Mami-san told me to trust them," Girl A murmurs. "She told me that they were coming, and that we just had to wait for them. Mami-san trusted them. I didn't. I went back to try and call them, but then..." It's then that the raven-haired girl shows the first flicker of emotion, squeezing her eyes tightly, a small frown curling her lips.

You turn to Mami and ask her about the supposed victims, those captured by the ones you were purging.

"...We never found them, Warmaster." The blonde shakes her head, her curls following her movement. "There were no other Magical Girls besides us, after the purge. We ransacked the entire building, from top to bottom."

Curious. Very curious, indeed.

"I confirm that," Malal says after a moment, consulting her tablet. "Besides Mami's squad and...well, the three Eversor Squads, there were no other Magical Girls in that building. "She...she was only trying to help, Warmaster." Is all that Mami Tomoe says, looking up at the chained girl. "She only wanted to save me."

How do you react? It seems that you've got enough information to make your judgment, if anything.

You mull things over for a few moments, giving this particular decision you're about to make the consideration it needs. A life is on the line, after all, and only your word could decide if that life continues to see another sunrise or ends right this very moment. Girl A is staring at you sullenly, her cold purple eyes staring into your black, crimson-pinned own.

"You have pretty eyes." She suddenly says to you, apropos of nothing. You blink at this, and Mami is surprised enough that she gasps, as well. You smile at this, before shaking your head.

"Thank you, but flattery, it will get you nowhere at this point, I think." You say slowly, before gesturing towards Malal. You whisper a few words to her, and it's then that she nods - tapping her tablet, before reaching down to pull a combat knife from its sheathe strapped to her boot. Mami's eyes grow wide at this.

"W-Warmaster, please, you can't--" She tries.

You hush her with a look, before you make your way behind Girl A. You slap the combat knife's tempered edge against your fleshmetal hand - and the sharp impact of metal clashing hard against metal, hard enough to cause sparks, causes nearly everyone inside the Silent Room to snap to attention. "I do not like to waste time," you start to say. "I have wasted enough time as it is listening to testimony, here. This is not how I do my judging. Judging for me is quick and easy, never this drawn out. But I did it, so that there will be no complaints for what I decide."

Malal is watching you closely, and she nods imperceptibly. You just feel that she' smiling at you from behind her visor.

"My judgment, then. It is admirable, of course, the way the accused protected your honor, and at the same time brought to light this betrayal. This should be enough for an acquittal. I think, it should also be enough for a medal. One does not kill twenty-one Eversors without getting a prize."

It's then that the chains holding up Girl A suddenly fall slack, and she lands on the floor - on both feet, and to her credit, she does not collapse right away. She almost knelt, but she stood up immediately, even in her state of malnutrition and thirst. Her left leg is shivering, in danger of buckling, but she stands. She does not look at you as you peer over her shoulder, looking at Tomoe Mami as she looks back at the both of you.

"Still. There is the matter of our betrayal. We have killed a score of our allies, and that is not to be taken lightly. Not in this game. An example must be made of. Girl A is right - someone needs to die. The balance must be restored."

"G-god, Kharn, please," Mami's eyes are wide now. "I...please, not her--"

You take both of Girl A's braids - each one having quite an unbelievable amount of substance to them, like thick heavy ropes - and you lift both of them up to reveal the back of her neck. There's an imperceptible shiver running down Girl A's back as you press the point of the combat knife against the spot where her spine should be. A simple shove, and the blade would pierce her spinal column, ending her life painlessly and quickly.

"My judgment is absolute and final. And I judge thee to die, Girl A. Kharn Valnikov, Warmaster of the 9th Incubator, has spoken."

Mami Tomoe's scream is delicious as you let the knife do its work.

It's a pity that she will never scream for you. But thems are the breaks.

Her scream is cut short as you toss the now-severed braids at her feet, each one thudding solidly upon the metal grating of the silent room's floor.

"Girl A is dead. Executed, this year of our Lord. ...Uh, Malal, please be taking down the date, thank you." Your aide shakes her head after a moment, as you try not to smile too much at Mami's reaction. "She is dead, and we will not speak of her any longer. In the meantime, ah! I have found a new recruit. Welcome to the Officio, I am Kharn, your Warmaster." You clamp one clawed hand on the girl's shoulder, before pointing towards Mami. "She is pretty girl, yes? Nod if you agree. I think she is pretty also."

It seems that the former Girl A - with her new impromptu haircut - is stunned as well, and she can only nod. Mami, meanwhile, seems to be trying to catch her breath, her face as pale as a sheet. Her eyes straying to the bundle of long black hair by her shoes.

"Two weeks pay docked from you, Mami Tomoe, for not watching Girl A enough, but that docking is suspended until further notice. In the meantime, please be cleaning her up, and send her to the Incubator's office in thirty minutes." You say as you gently push the young woman towards Mami. "I will be taking over her orientation and training, and we will be starting today. Malal, can you make her a new entry in our payroll? You can do that, right?"

"Of course, Warmaster." Malal replies, as if the question hadn't even been worth asking. "I'll need a new name, though. For the database. Coincidentally, I have a list here of names that may fit her--"

Both Malal and Mami look at you, and even with the former's visor, you could guess that your aide is sharing the same look of disgusted surprise with Mami.

"Murderface...? But I have some better names here, like Akemi--"

"Enough. Murderface. Her name is Murderface." You wave off Mami's pout, and Malal's exasperated sigh. "The name is perfect. Right, Murderface?"

Murderface - formerly Girl A - nods again, dumbly. Still stunned. She looks down at the severed braids on the floor, before reaching up to feel her hair, at the rough cut you made. Mami steps forward and whispers in her ear, both hands on the girl's shoulders, as if trying to reassure her somehow.

"There, see? She likes it! Now, no more arguing. We have to talk to Kyuubey." You hand the knife back to Malal, and she shoves it back into its sheathe. "If I am remembering, there is still meeting with the 3rd Warmaster, yes? We need to make sure Kyuubey knows about this betrayal, so he will not feel bad when I mobilize the entire Officio to murder his third brother."

Mami blinks at this. "W-wait, Warmaster. A...a complete mobilization? But surely you don't't--"

"Do not say dildos, that is unbecoming of you." You interrupt her, the grin still on your face. "The name is not dildos. Murderface is a good name, a strong name. And she will earn it, I will teach her."

"Still--"

"You will see, eh, good friend?" You laugh as you throw an arm around her shoulders, your aide gasping at the contact. "I am right about these things. Just like I am right about everything, all the time."

"...One day, she'll probably kill you, you know." Malal says quietly, not exactly squirming from your grasp.

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/13/12(Thu)12:33 No.20709419

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

Looking at you, though, it's clear that you're not quite the norm. Magical Girls are supposed to be pictures of cute, burgeoning femininity, maidens dressed in frilly gowns of bright solid colors. They are not supposed to have hands that belong to a giant demonic skeleton; or legs that belong on some overpowered survival horror videogame boss.

They are also not supposed to have eyes that belong to something that should only be looked at from within a circle of protection, with purity wards plastered all over the place.

Magical Girls are not supposed to be monsters.

>>20709419

But even beyond those, anyone can look at you and say that you're...unique, in a way. For someone who's supposed to be just a year shy of high school senior age, you're tall - enough to tower over everyone else in the Officio, even when untransformed (the legs do add a handful of inches, which you do not mind at all).

Despite your less than gentle upbringing in a gulag managed solely by your father, your figure filled out rather nicely, and you've managed to take care of your hair enough that you could let it grow out and not worry about it frizzling at random times during the day.

Your skin, pale enough to draw comparisons with porcelain and fresh milk, is free of blemish - if you overlook the scars you've earned during your career, that is, but you can easily hide them under your clothes, so they are a moot point.

These are all fine, though. You are not ashamed of them. Far from it, you've made it quite the habit to flaunt these differences that set you apart from the standard Magical Girl, to distinguish yourself from the rest of the magical masses. Not that you need any help standing out, of course, with your hands and legs being just slightly on the wrong side of rapey - but you'd be lying if you denied that they didn't help in any significant way on your path to becoming the 9th Incubator's Warmaster.

What you know never helped was your tongue.

Your slightly-longer-than-average tongue, which Malal herself had described as something out of a fetish video. It doesn't really cause you any problems with swallowing or talking or so on, and you can taste just fine with it - but you're secretly ashamed of it. Even if you're the only one in the Officio who could lick her own elbow, or the tip of her nose. You even scared a few novices with it, after inadvertently letting them see you eat ice cream off a cone.

Well, they looked scared, but they were blushing when they ran off, so.

Yes, this is your deep dark secret. Your tongue. You're sensitive about it enough that your aide even uses it to poke fun at you.

You are hilariously pathetic.

You should tell your aide to make a note for you: to find a better deep, dark secret for you to keep. If she cannot find one, she has to make one.

Because you do not want anyone to talk about your longer than average tongue after you die.

Freakishly long body parts aside, you are Valnikov Kharn, current Warmaster of the 9th Incubator's Officio Assassinorum. You have a thousand Magical Girls under your command. Your favorite weapon is a two-meter long black chainsword with monomolecular teeth. You fondly call it Skulltaker in public and lovingly maintain it in private. You have an almost unhealthy fondness of Jolly Roger sour candy, skulls and blonde women. You like to take it easy as much as you can.

And you are about to ask your Incubator's permission to go to all-out war.

Or well, waiting to ask him, anyway. He's on a call.

It's the reason why you've invaded his office. Even after being trained from day one that it is not a place to blithely barge into, no matter your rank or reason for doing so. The rather pretty girl at the receptionist's desk had tried to put up a token resistance at your arrival, but you simply waved her away, promising her that she won't get in trouble for your flagrant disrespect of authority.

Kyuubey, of course, is understandably irritated. At least, you think so, by the way he seems to nod at your arrival before continuing to talk to whoever it is he's talking to on his headset of his, while in front of his multi-screen computer thing. You wonder if he had his headset custom-made for him. It seems to be, you're not sure if a normal one will actually fit him properly.

Well, maybe he's not irritated at all, but you can never really tell with these mutant cats.

You let out a sigh. You are no good with waiting.

What do you do?

[]Eat another candy to pass the time.
[]Look at what Malal is doing beside you. She seems to be messing about with her tablet, again.

Ok, here is something I've been thinking about from the last trend.

What happened is that the third incubator staged a fake rescue mission and his squads were ordered to stab ours in the back.

However the thing is was that they were ordered to leave Mami alive.
Why do they want Mami? What is so special about her?

Thinking back, QB mentioned that the other incubators were getting reports of the gold weapons. It must have been found out by now that while gold weapons are dangerous, gold weapon welders are deadly.

So the possible motive of the third incubator is that he somehow heard about Mami's gold weapon and wanted to add her to his arsenal

You shift your weight from leg to bladed leg, before inching ever so carefully and slowly to the side, insinuating yourself into the sphere of privacy that Malal had learned, long ago, to forget ever enjoying whenever you are around. You manage to do this to the point that you are literally mashing yourself up against the side of your shorter and definitely more reliable aide - and to her credit, she is holding up against this stark intrusion of personal space very well, even if the side of her helmet is basically being pressed against two soft yet insistent, leather-encased intruders.

"Kharn?" She says after a moment, not missing a beat in typing out what looks to be random numbers, phrases and letters onto the tablet. You're not at all in league with computers or this kind of technology, but you do recognize that she seems to be coding something. Some sort of program, but that's as far as you can tell.

"Yes, Malal?"

"...Remember the talk we had about my respecting my personal space?"

You nod. "Yes, of course I remember."

"And what did we learn, then?"

"That I will never, ever respect your personal space no matter how much you beg or plead?" You say, smiling down at her.

A bereaved sigh, and some muted grumbling. "You snow shoveling yokel."

"Nebbish seaweed-eating pleb."

A moment of silence, with the exception of Kyuubey's muted murmurings into his headset.

"Malal," You whisper, secretly, conspiratorially. "Malal."

This way, if it gets stolen, any pertinent information in here is locked away." She shrugs her shoulders. "Don't really know if it'll actually work, but it's a nice way to spend the time."

You rap your knuckles gently on her helmet. "You are such a nerd, sometimes, Malal."

"Yes, well, some of us have other interests than getting other Magical Girls into bed during downtime, Kharn." The smile on your aide's voice is clear despite the vox-corruption. "And no, I'm not going to join in the next time. I'm not into blondes. I prefer a different shade of curtains."

That is much too bad, but Malal will be Malal.

You open your mouth to retort when Kyuubey clears his throat, one paw reaching up to pull down the headset, letting the contraption fall onto his neck.

"If you two have finished with the gutter humor, I am ready to receive you, as...sudden as this impromptu meeting is." Kyuubey's chair swivels around automatically, the large black leather seat turning to reveal the Incubator, the multiple screens behind him switching off. "Kharn. Malal. What do I owe the dubious pleasure of this visit?" Much like a cat, he clumsily pulls the headset off of his neck. "That was the Warmaster of the Eighth, by the way. She sends her regards, and hopes that you'll stay alive long enough for her planned sabbatical to Japan next year or so."

Hnh. It's been a while since you heard from Totally Awesome Sweet Alabama Liquid Snake.

You should probably tell her to bring you a bag of Jolly Rogers before she flies here all the way from the Americas, yes? You nudge Malal for it, and she grumbles that she'd already made the note.

"Well? What is it, Kharn?" Kyuubey says after a moment, tilting its head slightly as it looks at you. "Surely you've got a reason for barging in here? I would assume it's important, more than making the Fourteenth Incubator's Warmaster miss her flight."

And that confirms that he's irritated. You should probably be careful.

Kyuubey seems to blink at just what you've said, the gravity of your words not exactly sinking in as quickly as you hoped they would, but at least they're getting there. "Those are very serious accusations, Valnikov Kharn. Accusations that you don't throw around lightly. Just like a complete mobilization order isn't something you generally talk about haphazardly, even in jest."

Malal glances at you, before stepping forward with her tablet. "Sir, I do have the recorded statements of Girl A and Mami Tomoe here. I can play them back for you, if you'd like--"

Kyuubey shakes his head. "Kharn, what you are suggesting is that my own brother has conspired against me. The Third Incubator is one of the few in this misbegotten planet that I trust; he arrived here long before I did and helped me get started." Despite the obvious indignation in his words, Kyuubey's voice does not change from its young, inquisitive tone at all, making you wonder if he is simply reading from a script or not actually equipped to convey emotion. "As trustworthy as Tomoe Mami's word is, I find it difficult to sanction a complete purging of my brother's Officio, simply because of a rescued urchin finding a reason to murder three Eversor Squads."

Another sigh, before Kyuubey looks down pensively at the floor, tail swishing back and forth, almost in a mesmerizing fashion.

"Did Tomoe Mami hear these threats herself? Or was this something that Girl A herself told you, only?"

I think that there may be a greater plot behind all this. Perhaps the information that Murderface overheard was falsified? Or Malal is misleading Kharn and planting evidence for ominous reasons not known to us?

For someone like Kharn to be exiled and stripped of her rank (and given a nasty title that she bears willingly), it must have been something serious. Being subverted by her closest subordinate and executing an unjust purging of an allied Officio on false evidence would probably qualify.

I think it could be something along those lines.
For a moment I thought The Betrayer title might be something to do with this war we might engage in. My original theory was that Murderface had done something, like killing Malal or a load of innocents, and then Kharn had taken the rap for her.

Given that we know that whatever makes Kharn go to Siberia doesn't happen for something like six months though, it's much more difficult to say. All I can guess is that it involves the 'hunting' they went on.

You blink at this, before turning to Malal for confirmation. She shakes her head, and you reply accordingly. No, Tomoe did not here these threats, because she was a floor above. She did confirm the Eversor Squads being lax in moving to help them, though--

"We do not wipe out a single Officio because of incompetence, no matter how much that's justifiable." Kyuubey cuts you off. "I will require more proof to sanction this purge." The Incubator shakes its head, and for the first time you are struck by how disturbing the effect of its unchanging facial expression when it's clear that Kyuubey is quite incensed. "Otherwise, we will consider this matter settled and forgotten. Chalk it up to incompetence, or simply negligence due to complacency. I will arrange for Tomoe Mami to have an armed escort in the meantime."

How do you respond?

We might be happier at just getting straight to the skulls, but let it not be said that Kharn doesn't know how get the approval for them.

Ask permission to launch an investigation on any connection left of the Third's former yakuza allies. We'll want anything that leads back to the Third striking some kind of deal with their heads or even using them just for this particular incident.
There was no captured magical girl as claimed, so we should question the Third back on that and see how it reacts. If it insists that the girl is still missing, we should insist on participating on the investigation and rescue for them under the pretense of 'making up for the incident'. This time we'll send the absolute best plus Murderface, and not tell them who.

"As I said. Incompetence, malicious or otherwise, is not enough of a justifiable reason for a complete mobilization." Kyuubey's voice seems to carry the note of exasperation despite the fact that he'd begun to paw at his headset, much like a curious cat would a strange object. "You are talking about a thousand Magical Girls being set out to eradicate another thousand. The collateral damage here would be astounding, no matter how carefully we plan it. If you want to commit us to such an event, then it very well should be for a solidly-defensible reason."

After a moment, he looks up at you. "But I did not choose you as Warmaster just to discard your opinion, Valnikov Kharn. I value your insight - I'm sure you did not just posit this course of action merely because of emotion, or your strange hobby regarding skulls. Japan is...getting a bit small. I have heard that a cousin of mine, the Tenth, has officers working here in this city. My city." The two perfectly-round crimson eyes blink, slowly. "I am already sharing my territory with the Third. It's a question of when, not if, that I will have to take action and get some...leg room back, as you say."

Another sigh. "Still, we must look to move on from this...mess. Take consideration, at the very least, that we've eliminated any seditious elements from an allied Officio's payroll. Girl A did kill every single one of the suspected squads, didn't she? Then we have our pound of flesh. Consider that as payment. Whatever their impure intentions were, we can say that we have chastised them more than enough for their folly."

At your mention of your impending meeting with the Third Warmaster, he nods. "Yes, of course I know about that. I'm the one who had Malal remind you of it, anyway." He glances at the Culexus at your side, before returning his gaze to you. "If you are still bent on this course of action, then I'm sure you can get it out of her from your meeting with her. Should you find out anything of note, contact me at once and we'll make a decision together."

It's then that Kyuubey blinks. "Speaking of Girl A's termination - I received two rather interesting updates to the payroll just a few moments earlier. The first was Girl A being declared deceased. Executed on the premises. The second one came no ten seconds later, with a new contractee named Murderface." Kyuubey's seat swivels to face his multiple-screened workdesk, and the wall beyond Kyuubey lights up to display Girl A's profile alongside Murderface's.

The former having long hair and a rather dead expression, the latter a stunned, deer-in-the-headlights look, with a rather unprofessional haircut that ended her hair just above shoulder length.

Other than that, though, they look very identical to each other. As if they were almost the same person.

The alien cat, as you have long since figured out, does not have a sense of humor.

"Girl A" was an emotionless robot of a magical girl that was unremarkable other than the circumstances of her rescue. She has died as a direct consequence of her actions and by my hand.

"Murderface" is a magical girl who shows commendable loyalty to her squad mates AND managed to kill several squads of Eversors alone (without getting scratched). She was discovered not long after Girl A was executed. If trained and socialized properly, I believe that she could be an asset to this Officio.

You nod at Kyuubey and give him your best smile. You tell him, without being too blithe about it, that you have very high hopes for your recruit. After all, you've got the sneaking suspicion that she could take on three Eversor Squads on her own if she felt so inclined. You also mention that you'll be the one to handle her training, too - which, in the world of Magical Girls, is basically saying that you will be taking full responsibility for everything your ward may get up to. Including wholesale slaughter. ESPECIALLY wholesale slaughter.

". . ." Kyuubey is silent for a moment, before he shakes his head. Reaching forward, he places a paw on one of the screens, and Girl's A Profile disappears, leaving Murderface's to shift to the center. Slowly, the empty text fields in the bottom of the raven-haired girl's picture starts to fill themselves.

"As long as you know what you're doing, then." The Incubator says after a moment. "I'll grant her probationary status and have her assigned to you. Vindicare rank." It's then that Kyuubey seems to narrow its crimson eyes at the profile in front of him. "Perhaps it would do to seperate her from Tomoe Mami for a few weeks, or so. Her having imprinted on Tomoe Mami when she woke up had been key to her recovery, but her relying on Tomoe Mami to such an extent could have the both of them killed. Try and train that out of her. Break her if you have to."

You nod at this, while silently hoping that you would not have to resort to such things. Of course, not like it will not be easy, with Malal at your disposal, but doing something like that leaves a bad taste in your mouth.

"Murderface, though? No last name, just 'Murderface'?" Kyuubey asks, the inquisitive tone in his voice seemingly returning. "Was there a contest of most horrible nicknames you were trying to win, Kharn? Or were you just trying to make fun of the latest recruit yet again?"

Malal laughs at this. "Sir, I already tried telling her how it really doesn't fit her, and--"

You interrupt your aide by defending your choice of names. It's cool! It is a good, strong name! It immediately strikes fear in the heart of the enemy!

"I worry about you sometimes, Kharn." Kyuubey says, shaking his head, his long ears swaying gently with the movement. "But then I remember why I chose you as Warmaster."

Why did he choose you, then?

Kyuubey's reply seemed almost kind. "For someone a few cards short of a deck, you're the less likely to go crazy and kill us all."

That...is actually sweet of him. It's the first time he's complimented you in such a way.

You find your cheeks burning at this, and you elbow Malal firmly in the side as you hear her snort through her helmet.

"Yes, well. In any case. I doubt you have time to fool around, you have your meeting with the Third Warmaster to get ready for." The Incubator nods. "I would not suspect treachery during the meeting itself, but all the same, conduct yourselves with caution and grace. If something untoward happens, remain calm and assess the situation. That means no taking skulls first, taking skulls some more, and when everyone's headless, asking a question or two."

The both of you nod.

"Do you have any questions before I dismiss you?"

How do you react?

So, something I wanted to know for a while, figured I'd ask it now as long as Deculture's finished.

I've been following along with the quest for a while now, but I've only recently caught up on Puella Magica. So now I understand where most of the main characters came from and what their respective deals are, but I'm still lost on a few; what animus are Iori, Midori and Misaka from? And are Kharn and Malal from anything (other than their names being from 40k)?

>> ☐ !UdzMmUq0Oc 09/13/12(Thu)19:25 No.20713597

Iori and her friends are from Idolmaster, Midori is original, and Misaka is from A Certain Magical Index/Scientific Railgun.

Kharn's design is based on characters from Black Rock Shooter and Stein's Gate.
Malal is based on Akira from the Rival Schools games, based on what Deculture has shown and posted.

Though I suppose pointing that out is rather inane, considering that many of the characters referenced in this quest retain only their looks, sometimes their names, and not much else..

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/14/12(Fri)09:28 No.20720158

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

Back then, you were a pretty big deal. Warmaster - it doesn't get any bigger than that. A thousand magical girls under your command, under your heel, to do with them whatever you wished. Hell, you could have dragged Tomoe Mami to your room, kicking and screaming, to have your way with her, and it would only be considered as you enjoying the benefits that come with the job.

But you don't. You've never done that. Not with Mami, not with anyone.

Because you are Valnikov Kharn, and you will not tarnish your father's name any further. You have sworn it on your mother's grave.

And, while you would never admit it, you are afraid of making Malal angry at you.

Not because you fear her wrath. You've never seen her angry. Displeased, perhaps, maybe even miffed - but never angry.

It is simply because you do not want to lose the best friend you've ever had.

You will always covet Tomoe Mami, that is for sure.

But you will never trade a single night of pleasure with the blonde Vindicare - or even a thousand of them - for the friendship of a Culexus who has been there for you whenever you needed her.

Nothing will be ever worth that.

You are standing side by side with Malal, inside Kyuubey's cavernous office. The walls white, blank, inert of any visual data the Incubator has known to fill the entire room with, such is his work. He is sitting in his large, black Mafia Boss chair with the automatic swivel function.

You've sat there a few times, at his behest. During particularly stressful periods, he'd requested that you spend half an hour petting him on your lap, or merely brushing the fur of his coat. He'd fall asleep exactly at the end of that half hour, and despite the friction usually afforded by your professional relationship with him, you could not help but let him sleep. He looked like he needed the rest, back then, in any case.

But that was before your little incident, back when you still could cancel your transformation without needing to bother Malal about her temporary 'fixes'. You haven't really gotten another invitation from Kyuubey ever since - although a few times, he looked as though he was just about to, but thought otherwise at the last possible second.

This is one of those times, just after he's asked you if there is anything you need to know from him before you go.

[]Ask him about the Third Warmaster.
[]Ask him if he requires a thirty-minute lap break.
[]Don't ask him anything. Thank him for his time and leave; you need to get ready.

"The Third Warmaster?" Kyuubey echoes. "Hrn. Well. I must admit that I've little to no intel about her. I was going to ask you if you knew her personally, or if Malal here had any sources regarding her." The Incubator's chair swivels around, once more, and a small electronic beep precedes the multiple screens of Kyuubey's rig lighting up in unison to show one particularly-grainy photo of a fair-skinned young woman with long, platinum-blonde hair, blue eyes, and a rather mirthless smirk on her face. She is wearing what appears to be a rather ornate kimono the color of arctic ice, with various tasteful bits of soft amber and yellow here and there. She is grasping what looks to be a large, grand, golden staff of some sort, topped with a snake's head with its fangs bared to strike.

"She goes by the name of Ahriman. No word as to just what she's capable of, but we did find out that she forcibly replaced the previous Warmaster in an honour duel. No snap election of any sort - all the other girls accepted her right away as their new Warmaster." Kyuubey idly licks at the back of his paw. "Perhaps her vaporizing the incumbent Warmaster five seconds after the duel began had something to do with it."

...Vaporized the previous Warmaster, huh? Despite yourself, you find your old grin stretching your lips and baring your teeth, excitement flooding your veins. Finally. A nice challenge. An interesting one.

It will be unfortunate if this Ahriman was a reasonable girl. By the looks of her, she probably is. That means this little issue with Girl A's tantrums may be resolved in an amicable manner that should be mutually beneficial. Proper. Polite. Peaceful.

Boring.

"But it's not that you're really going into the meeting with violence in mind, right, Kharn?" Kyuubey says, and you hear the almost resigned sigh in his voice. "You're thinking about the good of the Officio and how it's important to maintain a working relationship with our comrades, am I not just wishing out loud here?"

"Kharn." Malal nudges your side after a moment's silence. "You're drooling."

You discreetly wipe after yourself, before reassuring Kyuubey with a much less bloodthirsty grin. He can definitely trust his Warmaster to do the right thing, you tell him. And just to ensure that his faith in you is unwavering, you offer him a thirty-minute lap break, just like the old days.

"...See to it that you do, Valnikov Kharn. I will not authorize a complete mobilization of the Officio unless I know that it's the only proper course of action. Until we reach that point, all efforts to settle this in a peaceful manner must be exhausted." He gives you a nod. "Dismissed."

You snap off a textbook salute at your Incubator - clenching your black fleshmetal fist over your heart - and it's then that you smartly turn on your heels to leave. You hear Malal step forward and say something to Kyuubey, which she receives no vocal response to, and you hear her boots thudding on the marble floor as she runs to catch up with your long, loping strides.

"Magic," Malal says as soon as she manages to catch up to you. "We'll be up against a competent magic user. Probably uses sparkly spells and all that crap, wizard robe, hat, the works." The double doors leading out of Kyuubey's office automatically swing open at your approach. "Should be interesting. The last one we fought didn't last too long."

One of Mami's squad got injured, but it wsn't stated who. I re-read the past threads and people ASSUMED it was Kyouko because she was lazing off when Kharn arrived at the Silent Room and becaude it would explain Sayaka kicking Girl A around.

However, it wasn't explicitly stated who was injured and being lazy during guard duty sounds like something Kyouko would do even in top condition.

You look towards Malal with mock surprise. Didn't she hear what Kyuubey said, earlier? About how you should avoid violent conflict with them at all costs, to preserve the status quo?

"Yeah, I heard him." The Culexus nods. "Then again, it's obvious he knows what you're planning on doing. Just like I know, too." She shakes her head. "May as well prepare for it, instead of hoping for the best." A vox-corrupted sigh comes from the well-concealed speakers of her helm. "I hate wasting time."

And that is why you do not want to lose Malal, you think as you slip your arm around her narrow shoulders, the smile still on your face.

She knows you so very well, it's often uncanny.

You make your way into the reception area of Kyuubey's office - and it's there that you find Mami Tomoe waiting for you, along with the new recruit, as well as the two differently-colored Eversors from earlier. Mami and the Eversors stand up quickly at your approach, while Murderface seems to take her own time doing so, enough that the blue one hisses something rather venomous towards her direction. Mami turns her head to sharply hush Blue, and the Red grumbles something from around a Pocky stick.

"Warmaster Kharn," Mami nods slightly as you stop in front of her, Malal tinkering with her tablet again beside you. "Girl A--er, Murderface, as you requested. I did my best to clean her up the best I could."

You glance at your trainee. She definitely looks like she's been washed and scrubbed rather thoroughly. Her costume pristine, new, devoid of damage or bloodstains. Even her glasses are new - the lenses clear, without the spiderweb of cracks that had made the old ones useless.

You smile at this, and thank Mami for a job well done. You don't vocalize the knee-jerk offer to reward her personally for her efforts; it's much too early in the day to be that smarmy, and Malal is like, three feet away from you. Have some class, Kharn.

What you get in return is an awkward smile of her own. "Merely following your orders to the letter, Warmaster." You can't help but detect a certain note of reluctance at that, as if she doesn't really mean it, rather just saying it out of politeness' sake. Her grip on Murderface's shoulder, who had remained quiet and motionless throughout the entire thing, seems to tighten ever so slightly.

You shouldn't mind this at all. Your rank makes it easy for people to detest you, especially those you hold authority over. It's just a matter of growing a thick enough skin that this kind of pain doesn't hurt you as much.

Still. To see her look at you in that manner...

It's then that one of the Eversors, the blue one to be exact, steps forward, polite as can be. You take this time to fully take in her features - short blue hair, sharp blue eyes, and a caped costume that almost seems tailor-fit for swordplay. You can't help but be impressed, and you probably would have, had you not heard about her...questionable behavior as of late.

"If...If I may ask, Warmaster," The blue-haired Eversor begins, hesitating slightly. "How are you planning on dealing with the Third Officio? Are we really going to mobilize everyone into a massed assault?" Eagerness is in her voice, along with a certain amount of bloodthirstiness that you immediately recognize.

How do you reply?

The blue Eversor seems to blink in confusion at your words, before paling ever so slightly, her eyes widening. "Penitence duties? B-but Warmaster, I was only--"

"Let's not add insubordination to your current offense, Miki Sayaka." Malal smoothly replies, stepping in for you, as she is wont to do in cumbersome situations like these. "We value your enthusiasm for the work we do here, and we treasure your expertise as an Eversor. But unsporting or unbecoming behavior is something we do not condone or tolerate, most especially from our top-ranking agents."

"I...um..." The Eversor known as Miki Sayaka is flustered here, but to her credit, she is not looking to her friends for support. Rather, she is meeting Malal's gaze head on, even if you yourself find it hard to talk seriously to such a macabre helmet. She turns to you a moment later. "I admit I got carried away, Warmaster, but I am--"

"--sent to the kitchens to help with the preparation of today's dinner." Malal finishes for her, tapping something on her tablet. "For an entire week. We don't really have any sort of sanctioned punishment for kicking someone fully restrained and unable to defend themselves, Warmaster, but I think that should be sufficient. Don't you? Kharn?"

You manage to tear yourself away from ogling Mami as she fusses about with Murderface's collar ribbon to nod. Yes, yes. A week peeling potatoes and making steamed rice sounds like enough humiliation.

Perhaps we could justify pulling apparent favorites by telling Sayaka that, while we appreciate that our new recruit may have just caused everyone a load of trouble, and that we can't order her not to be angry if she already is, she isn't making training the new recruit any easier by unbalancing her emotionally and distracting her focus.

Alternatively, look at it this way: only if Sayaka isn't actually justified in thinking Murderface was wrongly stirring up trouble does she get to go to war. So, hope that you're wrong, Sayaka.

Guess what! It is implied in the anime no matter what timeline it is. If Sayaka contracts she will always become a witch!

Anyway if it does come to that. We would have to go Code Geass and give Kyoto a 'live' command. Or more specifically "You will not manipulate the circumstances so you and the witch that used to be Sakaya will have to die together."

". . ." Sayaka is struck silent at this, before she bows to you a fraction of a degree - and you feel a familiar prick of sensation tugging at your subconscious. Someone's mad, mad enough to kill - but it disappears as Sayaka straightens up.

"Very well, Warmaster. I...accept your judgment. I will accomplish my penance and learn from it."

The crimson Eversor glumly murmurs a goodbye as the blue one stalks back towards the elevator, her cape billowing out of her.

That Sayaka...you'll have to keep an eye on her, you think. She reminds you so much of Kirika.

"...Thank you for choosing diplomacy over outward aggression, Warmaster." Mami is the first to break the awkward silence as she turns to face you, both her hands now on Murderface's narrow shoulders. "I...I don't think we'll ever agree on certain issues, but I hope that you share my belief that we do not need to draw this out into a long and bloody affair." She shakes her head, her blonde drills bouncing slightly in sympathy. "The Third Officio lost three of its squads, while we got away with only minor injuries. I do not think we need to bleed them any further than that."

You manage a small smile at her boundless optimism. Well, of course, that is what you said you will do, and she's free to believe it.

Unlike her, you are no saint, nor will you pretend to be.

With that, she turns to Murderface, smiling once more. The taciturn young woman's dark purple eyes looking up at her sullenly, silently, through her new glasses.

"Now, be sure to follow what Miss Valnikov says, alright? She's your commanding officer now. Her authority supercedes mine. Whatever she asks you to do, do it to the best of your ability. Be a good girl, understand?"

A quiet nod.

Wiping her eyes briefly with the back of her gloved hand, Mami turns to face you, nudging the raven-haired girl towards your retinue. "She's...she's all yours, Warmaster." She works up a bright smile, and you can't help but feel as if you're taking a child away from her mother. You suddenly feel like the monster that you are.

It's not a good feeling, you decide.

"We'll bring her back in one piece, don't worry." Malal replies for you, and Mami bows to your aide respectfully. Yet another testament of how the blonde Vindicare seemed to be a literal angel - while everyone else has treated Culexus with spite and revulsion, Mami had been one of the few to treat them as equals. Even your aide had had her share of encounters, some you personally settled yourself (much to her chagrin). She salutes you soon after, and then makes her own exit, leaving the red Eversor alone. She studiously nibbles on the last remaining bit of pocky, before pulling out a half-empty box of the things from behind her.

"A bit too late, I think, but, uh...sorry for Sayaka earlier, Warmaster. I was the one who got hurt, back at the purge. Was my fault anyhow - one of the targets I downed was still alive, enough to shoot me in the leg. Rookie mistake. Won't happen again." She gives you a fanged grin. "Still, thanks. This should cool her down a bit."

She nods at Malal, before stepping forward to press the box of Pocky into Murderface's hands.

"Take care of Murderface for us, yeah? Sayaka doesn't show it and Mami-san left quickly because she didn't want you to see her cry, but we like this idiot right here." The Eversor grins again as she pats imaginary lint away from Murderface's shoulders. "She may be quiet now, but she's got a mouth on her, just you wait."

This gets a reaction out from the Vindicare. "...Don't call me an idiot, idiot."

"Hah! See?" The red-haired girl guffaws. "A-anyway, sorry for taking up more of your time, Warmaster. I know you're in a rush and all." She makes a rather hurried salute. "I'll see if I can talk Sayaka into letting me help her with her duties. Not that she can't do it herself, but I'd like to make sure the Officio gets a nice hot meal for dinner."

The Eversor makes her exit finally, leaving all three of you alone in the reception area.

"Kyoko Sakura," Malal reads from her tablet as the three of you finally make your way to the Elevator. Behind you, Murderface is crunching rather noisily on the pocky sticks she'd been given. "Hmm. Says here she's rumored to be in a relationship with Miki Sayaka. I guess that...sort of explains things, I guess. Very astute, though. Potential Warmaster aide material right there. I just think that it'd be a real shame if Midori was relegated to essentially being one of those menial-task interns when she's going to be exposed to as much training as Chiaki is, though there is a point in seeing how her reverence/fangirling over Chiaki could be problematic. Though that may serve to ensure her loyalty to Chiaki, it may be best to have to that ironed out.

Although having her and Kyouko work together as Chiaki's joint aides could be a good idea. She'd keep Midori grounded, and also serve to inform Chiaki if something is going wrong.

Best plan would probably be to get Kyoko as an aide and Sayaka as a bodyguard or something. Kyoko's a good aide candidate as stated and getting Sayaka would help mitigate any jealousy or whatever. We should also try to get Mami and Midori just to keep an eye on both of them to help prevent shit from happening.
Of course, it's unlikely we'll be able to pull this off, it's a noir after all. All plans are destined to fail miserably. Kyubey would probably say we can't tie up that many resources or something, while he plots to make us all despair so he can meet his entropy quotas.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/18/12(Tue)12:20 No.20772373

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

It is during that point of your career that you had started playing around with the idea of retirement. No, not the kind of retirement where your Incubator is contractually obligated to send your own comrades to end your misery - the kind that has you hanging up your hat, removing the chain-teeth on Skulltaker and simply taking it easy on some tropical island somewhere. You'd live off of the money you've managed to save over the years, and wait for the monthly Grief Seed pension from Kyuubey.

You've never seen yourself retiring. To be honest, you like this sort of thing too much to give it up.

But the mere thought of going on without Malal by your side, after she'd been with you for so long...it doesn't exactly sit well by you.

It would be like trying to continue living after having your heart torn out of you.

Well, perhaps not like that. You've done that before. It wasn't nice.

>>20772373

You are Valnikov Kharn, Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. You have metal claws for hands and metal blade-limbs for legs. You are five foot nine, making you tower all over the other girls you have complete authority over. You are nicely-proportioned, enough to rival a certain blonde Vindicare. You are handy with a weaponized claymore the size of a chainsaw.

You also have a tongue that you're not exactly in good terms with, despite your ongoing attempts to accept it as simply another way of life making your entire existence a funny joke. Even if you are not laughing much about it.

But besides that, things seem to be looking up. You are in the company car - the special company car, meant only for the current Warmaster - and you're being driven towards your meeting with the Third Incubator's Warmaster. A heavily-armored Marauder painted black and decorated with your own livery, which of course involves a lot of gold detailing and skulls, it presents a rather imposing profile on the road, and a lot of the traffic you come across hastily get out of the way, moreso when they see the QB Heavy Industries special plate welded onto the chrome.

This of course pleases Malal, your aide and current driver. She can get the worst road rage at times, and her having an easy time with traffic is just good news for everyone.

Beside you, on the back seat, quietly and slowly crunching her Pocky, is Murderface, your new...Magical Girl trainee. True to Sakura Kyoko's word, she hasn't said much since you rescuing her from the Silent Room. She seems to have accepted her new fate readily enough, although you did notice that she looked rather longingly at Tomoe Mami as she made her leave.

There is some time before you get to the meeting place, which is of course in the 3rd Incubator's base of operations. Malal had told you that it has the makings of a trap, and only an idiot would gladly run into it.

It is a good thing, then, that you are not an idiot.

What do you do to spend the time?

You consider your new charge as you take out another Jolly Roger candy from your inventory, the plastic wrapping crinkling loudly as you carefully and slowly untwist the ends to make it relinquish the hard, sour candy treat within. The raven-haired girl's mechanical consumption of the chocolate-covered sticks slow just a fraction as she turns slightly to look at the noise - your eyes briefly meeting, before she looks away once more. Not a single word said during this, no noise except for the crunching itself.

You pop the candy in your mouth, letting the sour tang of combined grapefruit and orange blossom on your tongue - and it's then that you move over closer to the girl, your metallic legs clinking slightly as they bump together in the motion. She glances your way once more, and you give her the playful grin that had gotten you into many a blonde's underwear - but she merely stares back, deadpan, before turning away again in silence.

...You've received warmer reception from your mother's grave, and she had never been the affectionate sort.

But never let it be said that Valnikov Kharn was a quitter. You scoot a bit closer to your new charge, to the point where you're clearly violating her private space. Again, no reaction, but at least she's not reacting negatively. The first time you did this to Malal, she nearly broke your nose trying to bat you away.

What do you do?

You stare at Murderface for a moment longer as you toy with the slowly-melting sweet in your mouth. There are many ways in which to attempt a conversation with the taciturn young woman - her mysterious Shield, the source of her fearsome power, is one.

The strange design of it - how it looks more like a piece of ruined art than anything else, with the ugly gash running across the otherwise impeccably-designed surface - makes you all the more curious about who her original

Incubator was, and what did she wish for to bring about such an ability. But, ah, those are very private things to ask, yes? She will not be so forthcoming to share them with you, despite who you are. You are certainly Warmaster, but forcing your authority upon someone in this manner is unbecoming.

So you ask her about a subject that you believe is something you share in common. Something the both of you can relate to.

You ask her about Tomoe Mami, and it's then that the young woman's purple eyes widen just a little bit. She does not look at you, but this is enough to tell you that you have her attention.

"...Pancakes." She murmurs suddenly, the uneaten bit of a Pocky stick hanging from her lips, bobbing up and down with her mumbling. "She gave me pancakes, when I woke up. It was good. I wanted more. I cried when she said she didn't have any left."

It's then that she turns to face you, her eyes narrowed behind her glasses.

"Tomoe Mami is mine. You can't have her."

Malal's laughter, while obviously stifled, is betrayed by the sensitivity of her helmet's speakers. "S-sounds like you've got competition, Kharn," she says after a moment, the smile evident on her voice.

How do you respond?

The young woman's stiff, deadpan-delivered declaration is not so much a challenge as it is a statement of complete, utter fact delivered with the utmost conviction - and you could only hold back your laughter for a few moments more before finally letting it out yourself, sparks flying as you slap your armored knee. Murderface seems to grow sour at this, her eyes narrowing even further behind her glasses - but it's then that she blinks as you suddenly slip an arm around her shoulders, pulling her close to you, muffling her protests by pressing her face tight against the side of your left breast.

"Murderface, Murderface, Murderface." You begin, chuckling still. "I did once try to get into the Golden Goddess's pants. Sadly she rebuffed me, kissed me on the cheeks and that was the end of it. I will have no woman unwillingly."

She mumbles a protest, putting up a token effort to squirm out of your grasp. Her heart is not exactly in it, which means she is listening. You continue.

"Mami is like candle, no, Mami is bonfire that moths like you and me are attracted to but it is too beautiful for us to touch, it would burn us. So it seems we both must suffice with kisses on cheek and pancakes."

By this time, she had stopped squirming. Stopped moving, in fact. Perhaps giving you a listen, now that you've declared yourself out of the running. Giving you an ear, not out of pity or consideration, but of triumph.

You loudly crunch on the undissolved remains of your Jolly Roger candy, grinning, before delivering the final blow. You release her from your grasp, and she tries to get some distance from you, inching closer to the car window - but you close the distance quickly, taking her chin delicately between clawed thumb and forefinger, as you move your face mere inches away from hers. Your lips almost touching.

"So Murderface, if I can not have Mami for she is yours, can I have you instead? You'll find I can be...very persuasive." You lick your lips for emphasis, giving her a sneak peek at your accursed tongue.

The girl's eyes is impossibly wide behind her glasses, her cheeks coloring by just the slightest bit. A moment more, and she averts her eyes, looking to the side, seemingly flustered. Speaking in the same deadpan murmur.

"But...but we're both girls, and...and that's forbidden love..."

"Kharn, you heard Murderface." Malal calls from the driver's seat, barely keeping in her laughter. "You heard her. That's FORBIDDEN LOVE. Now stop trying to molest the poor kid and let her eat her snacks in peace. We're almost there."

You frown at your aide, before letting go of the short-haired Magical Girl with the unbelievable opinion about such a pure, sacred type of love between two Magical Girls. You scoot back to your side of the back seat, crossing your arms.

allows her to control it and limit it's effects.

Still, Mami and Kirika could tolerate it fairly well in the first flashback, so it's probably something that someone can build up a partial resistance to.

You try to silence Malal's muted snickerings and get some semblance of your wounded dignity back by asking Murderface loudly enough about her shield. The girl seems to blink for a few moments, as if slowly waking up for a trance, before glancing at the metal disc clamped to her right arm. She stares at it for a good minute or so, as if wondering herself where she got it.

"It stops time," Murderface murmurs, raising her arm and twisting it slightly to get a good look at the thing - the ugly gash running across it brought into starker relief. You can see the multitude of gears clicking and spinning away in its innards - which is mind-blowing, considering that the device looks much too streamlined to have any sort of heavy machinery inside.

"It stops time at my command. Sometimes I need to force it." The raven-haired girl takes hold of the rim of the shield with her other hand, and mimes turning the entire thing on its axis. "Sometimes it obeys my thoughts. Sometimes...it does so without any reason." Murderface shrugs. "It also gives me guns. Sometimes it gives me the right ones, other times sit gives me strange things."

Hnh. So besides being a somewhat perfect Time Stop, it also gives her randomized munitions? Certainly a finicky thing, this device, but you have no doubt of its potential. After all, it saw twenty-one Eversors dead, and an Eversor only gets to call herself that after she kills enough people to fill a mortuary.

You thank her for her explanation before balling up the plastic wrapper of the Jolly Roger you've just unceromoniously crunched down on; and it's with a flick that you toss it towards the back of Malal's helmet. The Culexus reaches back with a gloved hand and catches it without even looking away from the road.

"Kharn, throw your candy wrappers in the bin." Your aide's voice is patient, yet somewhat exasperated. "Come on, I just had this cleaned this week."

You are still a bit sulky, so you ignore that bit. You ask her instead about planning for your meeting with the Third Incubator's Warmaster.

"Planning? When have we ever gotten into a scrap with a plan, Warmaster?" Malal laughs as she uses your title, and you glower at her all the more. Beside you, Murderface seems to be nodding off slightly, having finished her box of Pocky, her eyes opening and closing as she tries to keep awake.

"Look, obviously, this is a trap. For fuck's sake, Kharn, they didn't even pretend to ask for a neutral meeting ground. We're going right into the belly of the beast, here. But we don't care, do we?" Malal chuckles. "They've got the home court advantage, and we're the away team, and we're just going to walk in there and fuck their cheerleaders."

As always, Malal knows how to cheer you up. Yes, that is how you've always conducted yourself as Warmaster. Often going into hostile territory without so much as a plan. Usually, your own talents - and your aide - would be enough to get you out of any tight spot should they prove to be too tight. With a Time Stopper on your side, it would be a piece of cake.

THIS!

It may have been only two days, but she not only seems to have learned quickly how to deal with Chiaki - after some explanations about the Murderface-Expierience - but also kept us pretty much from being corrupted fully at the expense of her own safety. I mean.. Holy shit, we stabbed her and tried to cut of her arms and she still clung to Chiaki. I think that without a fucking doubt she is loyal to Chiaki.

I do believe that if we get to be warmaster we should let her be our aid. Yes, there will people who won`t like that. Yes there could be issues with people not wanting to follow her orders. But jesus fuck, I don`t think that anyone in the Officio besides maybe Sayaka would have the balls to call out Murderface on that, especially with the reputation of reverence/fear she has.

Actually one could use Midori as PR. You know, other Agencies/Mahou Shoujos being so overwhelmed by Murderface`s antics that they pledge loyalty to our glorius incubator out of veneration for her.

And lastly.. We are Murderface. Sure she is now Warmaster but since when did she actually believe that people will be happy about anything she does? So we can go as well with "Fuck you! I do what I want!".

Still...something's bothering you about the entire thing.

"It is rather strange, isn't it?" Malal says as a particularly-tall building looms into view in the horizon. The SANY Corporation Tower, headquarters of a particularly old company that first specialized in calculators, and now were into game consoles. You have the latest model in your room, but you haven't bought any games for it yet.

"Three squads for a purge, holding back and letting Mami's squad do all the work...they were definitely trying to screw us over, but for what? Kidnap Mami Tomoe and hold her for ransom?" You feel the Marauder slow down as Malal eases back on the gas, trying to buy time before your grand arrival. "Some things doesn't fit. Hopefully we'll get the answers we need from their Warmaster, but I'm not counting on it. This Ahriman girl doesn't look like she's all there, judging by her photo."

You chastise her gently for judging a person by her looks alone. Maybe it was a bad time for that photo, you never know!

"I think I've spent enough time with Warmasters to know that not a single one of them is all there, Kharn." Malal replies, the vox speakers of her helmet giving her voice a waspish edge. "Totally Awesome Sweet Alabama Liquid Snake being one of them." She shakes her helmet-encased head. "Who in their right mind would attach a rocket engine to a hummer rigged with a metric ton of explosives, and jump it into the face of a Witch, before diving out just as it explodes?"

Someone from America, you reply. Someone with imagination. With artistic flair. With...with zazz.

"I rest my case. Anyway, we're here." Malal remarks as the Marauder comes to a full stop, right beside the SANY Corporation building's front porch. She tosses two miniaturized headsets at your direction. "Give one to the new girl. Don't put them on until we need them - no need to tip them off right away as to what we're going to do. That'd just ruin the surprise, you know?"

You nod, and gently shake Murderface awake. She blinks at you, before nodding as you instruct her to conceal the communication device, and to bring it out only when it is needed. She places it inside her inventory. You follow suit, and it's then that all three of you exit the Marauder. The beast of a vehicle chirps as Malal activates its security system, before jangling the keys and placing them inside her own inventory.

"These bitches better not do anything to the car," Malal grumbles, before turning towards you. "Well, Warmaster, let's not spend any more time here than we have to. Meeting's supposed to take place at the top floor, CEO's office." She takes out her tablet, unlocking it with a swipe and tapping at something on its surface. "We're approximately ten minutes late. Just enough to be fashionable and make an entrance."

You nod, frowning as you glance at the seemingly empty foyer and ground floor of the building. Not even a welcoming committee. No banners, no red carpet, not even party poppers. Surely the arrival of a Warmaster warrants something more special than...an abandoned ground floor?

Actually I don`t think she does. I mean. Sure, she probably thinks so, but its not the case since she doesn`t know everything about Chiaki. Before we decide if we want to have her as our bedwarmer we should probably make it absolutly clear what it means to be with us. There is no happy ending waiting at the end of that road. None. Even Chiaki ralizes how her body and commented on this in her inner monologue how her body seems to be shutting down more and more. Even we don`t ruin her life horribly by making a poor choice, we have a Ultra-Witch stalking us and there is still the stuff with the golden weapons, even without I would give Chiaki ..what.. a year? Maybe two? before she either dies or turns into a witch.

Megucas don`t have the luxury of getting older than 20. No happily ever after. You either die or turn into a witch out of despair.

And lets not forget that this isn`t Homura. Her Motivation and drive behind all the shit she went through was that she could rescue Madoka. Chiaki`s is drowning herself in booze and painkillers otherwise she would probably have witched out months ago.

"They handle things differently here, Kharn." Malal reminds you as she leads you and Murderface into the building - the three of you strolling through the front doors left ajar, some of the panes of glass broken right through. "There's really no accounting for taste. Or manners." You reach the elevators without any incident.
"Although..." Malal's voice is pensive as it is filtered through her helmet's speakrers. "It could be the fact that they've all taken up positions in the upper floors. You know, just in case we try and fight our way downstairs in our attempt to escape." She nods. "Makes an awful lot of sense. If they got you, the Officio's Warmaster, then certainly Kyuubey would be out of a bargaining chip, wouldn't he?"

The elevator doors open as soon as Malal hits the Call button, and the three of you step into the provided lift. The doors close with a hiss, and you feel the elevator's ascent slowly, inexorably upwards.

"We should just kill all of them and be done with it," Murderface suddenly murmurs, from beside you. "Purge the entire building. Including the Incubator." She wrinkles her nose, seemingly in disgust. "They smell bad when they die," She adds, as if that somehow explained everything.

A good idea if you've ever heard one, you smile.

"Then why can't we?" The raven-haired girl asks, frowning her perennial frown.

"Because we have to try," Malal answers for you. "Try and see if something of an agreement could be reached.

Settle this amicably, without having to add to the body count." The Culexus reaches out, with a gloved hand - and despite her being only a few inches taller than Murderface, manages to ruffle the young woman's hair. Your charge does not seem to take kindly to the gesture, but she stays put.

"Because that's what Tomoe Mami would do." She finishes, and there's a wistful note to her voice when she says that.

The elevator continues its ascent. Towards the Third Warmaster, and her retinue --

"Hey, Kharn." Malal suddenly says.

You blink at her. "What?"

"I'm aware of my tongue."

The inside of the elevator earns a small tend on one of its walls due to having a Culexus helmet knocked into it.

That is not a very funny joke. Not at all.

Uhm, lets see, Feedback..uh.

Overall I liked, though I think that the 40k references get a bit our of hand. I mean.. I liked it whan it was for the flavour but now we have Kharn, Malal and even Ahriman.

It also seems to suffer from the usual "Push Button, something awesome happens!" in the same manner it happens to nearly every Quest on /tg/ down the road and is the reason while they often turn "meh" at a cartain point. Not that there is something wrong with awesome things happening but if it just keeps happening the novelty and uniqueness wears off and its gets way too LOLSORANDUMBXD!

I mean its your quest and people obviously like it, and I`m probably completly wrong about it, Deculture but I think that the quest should have a bit more of a darker tone. Especially since its supposed to have the NOIR part in it and the animu and Spin-Off-Mangos kind of managed to get that too. Not that your quest lacks it or something, it has it moments but I think that all in all it needs more suffering and I probably should stop talking now since I`ll sound to negative or critizing about it or something. and I don`t want that.

Uh.. anyway. Here is your feedback though its probably something you didn`t want to hear and I`m probably pretty alone with my opinion, yeah. I like it very much though.

I agree with the problem with the choices, many seem fairly pointless as they tend to be "Do something or do nothing." Obviously not every option needs to be deep or anything, but having to continually stop for a meaningless choice just slows the action down.
It's a delicate balance, too many pointless choices slow the game down but too few and it removes player agency and just because a glorified fanfiction.

As for the noir problem, that's another issue of balance. You need light hearted moments to contrast with the darker parts. I think Deculture's doing this pretty well as we all seem to be dreading the end of this happy flashback when Malal inevitably dies. If it's all dark all the time, people won't bother to get attached to the characters and the tragic losses fall flat.

One, stop writing like a sniveling little bitch. If you have something negative to say, say it. Nobody's gonna punch you over the Internet.

Two, you have to build to a darker tone in order for it to mean something. You've gotta know happiness to know true despair. And a noir is more about a seedy, stylish atmosphere than what constitutes "dark" for a lot of fa/tg/uys. A story about assassins, self-destruction and grasping for straws in the gutter is pretty fitting in tone. We just goof around since Deculture writes slowly/this is a flashback.

Three, the "Push button, receive awesome" is an artifact of the quest format. It's instant gratification; without it it'd just be straight storytime.

>> ☐ Anonymous 09/18/12(Tue)16:55 No.20775470

Yep, once this flashback ends we will have to deal with a Stockholm syndrome fangirl, an (ex?) idol who we fear will contract and some process that Kharn wont talk to us about.

I always interpreted it as asshats running everything, but they recognize that everything needs to run smoothly/orderly and have at least some degree of legitimacy or everyone will kill you. Along with some truly good people making some parts of their world good and right. Kinda gritty with lots of contrast and grey areas, but not grimdark.

This. Honestly, we're doing pretty well as far as Noir aesthetics go; as others have said, you need the rays of hope to really feel the punch of the dim, gritty despair. Noir isn't about "Let's make things as bad as they could possibly be AND THEN SEE HOW WE CAN MAKE IT WORSE!", it's hanging onto that thin, frayed string of hope, striving to pull yourself out of the gutter, knowing that things are shit and nothing is likely to change that, and yet still trying, beneath the cynicism and the alcohol and drug abuse, to be the best you can be and make the world a better place.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/21/12(Fri)11:55 No.20809974

And you did all your Magical Girling with a chainsaw.

A weaponized chainsaw to be exact - one that's over two meters long, weighs approximately ten kilograms and has two rows of monomolecular chainteeth. It's painted nearly completely in black, save for some ostentatious golden bits here and there. The handle is wrapped in thick leather to make for an easier grip, and is capped by a screaming demon skull.

Its name is Skulltaker, and with it you have ended the lives of men, women, Witches and Magical Girls.

>>20809974

It has three settings. KILL, the first and default setting, has both rows of chainteeth moving in the same direction for a cleaner, quicker cut. MAIM, the second, has the two rows chewing air in opposite directions, for when you're feeling like you want to get dirty. BURN, the third and final mode, is basically MAIM, except that the entire blade is on fire.

It would not be willingly that you would part with it, for any reason at all. They would have to pry it out of your cold, dead fingers first - which is totally accurate, considering that they are metal. And skeletal.

It is a shame, then, that the Magical Girls of the Third Incubator is asking you to do just that, before they let you into their little party.

For everyone's safety, they had said behind perfect smiles.

Most especially yours.

>>20809978

You are Valnikov Kharn, Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. It is currently morning, late morning to be exact, just an hour or so before lunch. You are scheduled for a meeting with the Warmaster of the Third Incubator, to discuss matters of a grievously important nature. Said matters of course involve your latest subordinate, whom you have so eloquently dubbed as 'Murderface' - and her remorseless, but certainly justified slaughter of three Eversor Squads belonging to the 3rd Incubator's Officio.

The brief elevator ride you had taken with your two subordinates (the other one being Malal, your aide and best friend, a Culexus) had brought you to the top floor - and the elevator doors itself seemed to have opened something...strange. Instead of what you'd expect from a normal office building floor, it is a grand and decadent setting, with thick red carpet muffling your footsteps as you step out, candlelight illumination, and uniformed servants carrying trays of finger food and drinks in delicate crystal.

It is almost like a castle's throne hall, except for a throne at the very back of it, there is some sort of white, wooden construction, elaborate and elegant. A gazebo, and from the looks of it, occupied by none other than Ahriman herself.

You can almost taste her killing intent, the scent of it spiking the moment you stepped forth from the elevator doors.

"They certainly don't mess around when it comes to break rooms," You hear Malal murmur, her voxsponder stealing the mirth and amusement in her voice.

>>20809985

There are other Magical Girls milling about, that much is obvious from the way they carried themselves - but strangely enough, they seem to be wearing white. Dresses, kimonos, some of them even in gowns. All elegant, all white. Making you and Malal certainly stand out.

"They're mourning," Malal had volunteered, seemingly sensing your confusion. "White's the Japanese color for mourning, just like black is. The former's a bit more traditional, though."

That certainly explains it. But of course, it does not explain why you are being stopped before you can get any further - six Magical Girls, their weapons drawn, surround your group in a half circle. The one at the middle, a rather pretty young woman with long crimson hair tied into twintails, smiles at you and tells you to do something you have never done, since the beginning of your career as a Magical Girl.

Her smile does not reach her bright emerald eyes as she asks you to relinquish your chainsword.

"Please help us preserve the solemnity and sanctity of this occasion by relinquishing all weapons on your person to us." Her words are smooth and soft, like honey. "They will safekept for the duration of your meeting with the Warmaster, after which they will then be returned."

Had she not been wielding a rather impressive katana while she said this, the naked blade polished to a mirror-like sheen, its edge curiously serrated - you would have considered her approach as an invitation for flirting.

As far a Kharn knows Murderface can spawn weapons right?

"Very well, my subordinate will relinquish her weapons first. Murderface, give them your weapons. All the weapons.

We are playing nice because the mutant cat doesn't want us to murder everything in sight and Kharn despite giving no fucks doesn't just murder everything because she can.

She screws everything she can, is showy as possible and murders anyone who pushes her.

Plus Ahriman could fuck with us pretty badly if we start a fight at this distance, if we get close we have giant metallic arms and legs with which to tear her and anyone close to her apart with anyway

It would be different if we were going into an openly hostile situation as we wanted to but kyuubs is asking us to not murder first, murder second and then think about asking the dead bodies some questions so we try it his way so next time he won't even bother asking us to avoid bloodshed

Surrender your weapon? You barely manage to keep a straight face as you struggle not to chuckle, which you have the strangest feeling will strain this little meeting some. Actually handing over Skulltaker to someone else, letting another's hands besides you touch the brutish, monstrous chainblade - it is almost too unthinkable to even ruminate. It is like your father letting someone else touch his gun. You remember the horrendous beating he gave you when you did that. Malal remembers the spanking you gave her when she tried it.

The girl in front of you smiles, seemingly taking your amusement for hesitation, before bowing. "Warmaster Valnikov, please. I humbly request that you surrender your weapon to us. I realize the implications this may have on your reputation that precedes you so, but please take into consideration the current circumstances." She lets out a small sigh. "We are mourning for our lost sisters. I implore you not to taint our grief with suspected treachery and ill-placed bluster. We simply wish to mourn in peace."

Hnh. You raise an eyebrow at this. At the very least, they seem to be genuinely in grief about the entire thing. This still smells like a trap, just like Malal said, but even you realize that some requests need to be honored, planned treachery or no.

If this is a trap, then you will kill them. But not one of them will go to the grave saying that Valnikov Kharn never respected the dead.

The pinprick of red at the center of your midnight-black eye dilates as a crimson flame flicker sinto existence before it - and Skulltaker, in its black, brutish magnificence, materializes in your grip with a brief gout of hellish fire, prompting the group surrounding you to involuntarily step back in its appearance. You don't blame them - even while inactive, the sword's chainteeth look much too hungry for blood to be considered safe, too dangerous even when inert.

It's with a casual, almost negligent flick of your wrist that you toss the blade up into the air by its handle - and just as you catch it, your fleshmetal skeletal fingers curling around the leather-bound handle do you stab it into the carpet-covered floor, blade first. A horrendous sound of metal and concrete being mangled joined by the shriek of grinding steel causing everyone to stop and watch - including the string orchestra playing some snooty classical piece in the corner of the vast room - as you bury Skulltaker into the floor, like a grotesque parody of Excalibur.

Beside you, Malal is burying her helmeted face in her gloves, while Murderface looks on in complete and utter silence.

Of course, deaths of comrades must always be grieved. I am not blind to this. Thus I will let this unreasonable request slide."

You gesture to the buried weapon in front of you. "Ah, but then, please forgive me for my own indulgences. I am of a superstitious sort - I believe that if I allow anyone else to handle my weapon, then I am disrespecting its spirit, and thus will affect its performance in a detrimental fashion. So I am not surrendering it, but rather I am leaving it here." You end your words with a grin, and Ahriman's girls glance at each other uncertainly, except for the red-haired one who simply returns your smile with a small one of her own. "Everything is okay, yes? This is allowed?"

More murmurings between your reluctant custodians, before their obvious leader speaks up. "Unorthodox, but it will do, Warmaster Kharn. Thank you for indulging us." It's then that she nods towards your aide and your new subordinate. "Now for theirs."

You open your mouth to voice a protest. Now this is simply just being too overbearing. You--

"Nevermind, here," Malal says as she unclips her combat knife from ankle, sheathe and all, before handing it to the girl. The crimson-tipped crowbar that she keeps mag-locked to the back of her suit is handed over as well.

"Thank you." Red Twintails says, smiling once more. "As for her?" She looks towards Murderface, who looks back at her sullenly, purple eyes dead behind her glasses. A moment more, and she looks towards you, as if waiting for an order.

You clear your throat carefully, bringing the welcoming committee's attention back to you, not to your new subordinate - and it's with an almost casual air that you pull Murderface in front of you, both your skeletal hands on her narrow, delicate shoulders. You're inwardly surprised just how easily she let you manhandle her - you were expecting some sort of resistance - but it seems that whatever Mami Tomoe had said to her had stuck. She was yours, and she was going to obey without question.

You smile at this. Oh, the fun you'll have with her.

"First, my apologies for this one," You begin. "She is a new member of my retinue, as well as a fresh recruit. She is, how you say, a bit slow on the up-taking." You guffaw as you poke at her cheek with the tip of a skeletal finger, before pinching that cheek slightly, pulling it outward. The girl, to her credit, does not even move a single inch, nor change her sullen expression. "In any case, she has no weapon to surrender. She has a shield, see?" You let go of her cheek to take her right arm, lifting it into view. "You will note that it already has battle damage, from blocking a grievous blow. It is for defence, not for offence. Surely she does not need to relinquish it?"

You've spun bigger lies before, said them with a sincere smile and an open heart. There is no way they could not believe you. You are Warmaster, after all.

Red Twintails looks at Murderface, then back at you, her smile dropping slightly - before brightening again, and nodding.

"Yes, of course. Forcing her to remove something like that does seem unreasonable." She turns to nod at her compatriots, who then step away, breaking their formation. "Very well, Warmaster of the Ninth. You and your retinue may pass."

"Thank you," You smile as you walk past her, both Murderface and Malal following close behind - and you give Red Twintails a playful grope on the rear as you pass her. She squeaks loudly at this, and you hear the clang of a finely-forged sword as it is dropped on the floor. You hear the girl gasp your name, almost breathlessly, just before her comrades surround her.

"I saw that," Comes Malal's whisper, tinged with just a tiny bit of exasperation, as well as amusement. She pulls out her tablet from behind her, swiping and tapping on the screen. "Grade?"

You tell her your findings. A bit too athletic for your liking, but nonetheless soft and warm. Has potential. A solid 8, you declare. You should remember to ask Ahriman for the girl's name and phone number.

"She's not blonde, though." Your aide helpfully points out, which you wave off. Sometimes, you explain, one most get out of their comfort zones to discover something new.

Besides, you have been curious about redheads for the longest time.

"What's next? Brunettes?" Malal snorts, glancing at Murderface, before shaking her head. "Right. Noted."

You have just gained access to the 3rd Warmaster's little gathering. You are without your weapon, Skulltaker. Your aide is unarmed as well. Murderface, on the other hand, seems to be unrecognized as of the moment.

Off to the side of you, you notice something peculiar. A girl in a pink dress, standing out from the crowd of whites. Her equally pink hair tied into two cute ponytails, secured by black ribbon. Her skirt a marshmallowy, frilly poofy affair.

Well, this is interesting. Not only does she seem quite the standout from this sombre crowd - you've never really liked white yourself - but she seems the perfect picture of innocence, smiling quietly to herself, rocking slightly back and forth on her black high-heeled shoes. She may not be blonde, yes, but pink...it's a hair color you don't see much of, if at all. Redheads are much more common, brunettes even moreso...but pink is much more rare, much more special.

You make up your mind. You will have this pink-haired beauty with the charming eyes.

Perhaps this little meeting will not be as dreadfully boring as it is looking, eh?

"Kharn?" You hear Malal's voice by your side, and a tugging at your right sleeve. "Kharn, Ahriman is just there, in the gazebo. Just a bit more of a walk and we can get out of here." She is sounding a bit annoyed. "...What are you looking at?"

You break your gaze away from the enchanting young woman in the pink dress to look at Malal. As if on cue, she lets out a sigh.

"Right. Come along, Murderface. You don't need to see this. I might as well teach you what sort of drinks to order when you see a wet bar in a function like this." Malal takes your charge by the hand, which she doesn't seem to resist against. "Our Warmaster needs some time on her own, and I think it's better if I don't let you see what's about to happen."

". . ." Murderface eloquently replies as she lets herself get dragged. "We'll wait for you near the Gazebo, Kharn. I'll give QB a call to let him know what's up, too."

There she goes, your aide and best friend. How well she knows you.

You saunter towards the girl in pink, placing your cap back on your head, making sure it is in a rather rougish angle as you make your way to her. Fleshmetal legs clanking with each confident, loping stride.

She doesn't seem to take much note of your approach, which is...admittedly a bit disconcerting, but you do not give up so easily. Stopping right in front of her, you sweep your hat off of your head as you curl into a graceful, almost gentlemanly bow - and predictably, this gets you an appreciative gasp and a rather giddy giggle from the girl.

You hold the pose for a moment longer, breathing in her peculiar - but certainly not off-putting - perfume, before straightening up, tucking your cap under your arm. You have caught her attention, truly, and she's looking up at you with her sunless eyes, rapt with attention. You smile down at her, the girl a full head shorter than you (and then some) - and it's then that you introduce yourself. You make it a point to leave out your rank.

"My, you're tall, aren't you?" Is the first words you hear from this delightful, delicate flower. Granted, you were expecting her name, but this is common. "And such beautiful hands! And eyes! Oh, if I only weren't spoken for, already, I'd be so tempted...!" She clutches her cheeks with satin-gloved hands, her face reddening in a chaste display of temptation.

How do you react?

"So... What happened to Malal? How did she die?"

She blushes even more at her words, to the point that she turns away from you with a shy, coquettish gasp as she clutches at her cheeks - clearly embarrassed at how thick you're laying it on. Well, to be honest, you're actually taking it easy, this time - usually, you're much more direct with your approach, a bit more brusque and rough. But something about this girl tells you to be delicate, to be subtle. To be smooth.

It's only after a moment that she seems to regain her composure enough to turn back to you to reply, a mock frown of disapproval briefly curling the corners of her soft, unpainted lips downward before she smiles again. "Oh, Miss Valnikov, that is simply too much! Please, do not utter such words carelessly, or I fear that my vows to my beloved shall be strained, and I tempted to break them!"

It's then that she placesg one gloved hand on her chest, right above her soul gem. "My, look at what you've done. My heart...it's racing." She looks up at you, mournfully, at the same time pleadingly. "Please, do not do that again, Miss Valnikov. You make it far too easy for someone to fall for you...but even with my own body begging me to surrender to you, I...I can't help but think about what would happen to my beloved, if she were to find out. The betrayal would break her." The girl in pink shakes her head, her mood suddenly somber. "No, I can't do something like that to her. She'd be devastated..."

Her voice trails off into silence, murmuring a name. You can't quite catch it, despite your hearing.

But I'll keep the name of my beloved to my own, thank you. I know that look in your eyes! You may have the advantage of me, Miss Valnikov, but you will never be my beloved's rival!"

Murderface is Homuhomu, or a reasonable facsimile thereof. Thus, she would know Madoka.

Kharn is not. Thus, Faust. Although coobie did have Madoka on record.

Well, if my SPECULATIONS about this being an alternate universe that Homura somehow got Godoka to create and the effort turned her into Faust.

Perhaps the Madoka that Coobie has on file is the 'native' version while faust is obviously the one who became a goddess (and got turned into a witch).

You inwardly sigh as a smile of begrudging defeat curls your own lips. Truly, the most interesting ones are always taken already, eh? Of course, Nero was interesting in her own right, but this petite young woman in her poofy pink number...she is simply much too special to pass up on, a fruit that should be tasted at all costs. If it weren't for your annoying little habit of backing off once your prey had made it known that she was already spoken for, and that she did not want to betray their trust, well...you would have taken her right there, you think. Yes. Like wolves in heat.

You try to downplay the sting of rejection as you give her a nod with your smile, asking her instead about what was she doing here. She does not look at all sad or sombre like the rest, nor is she swaddled in mourning colors.

Surely, someone like her should be spending time with her beloved instead?

At this, she smiles again, only this time her smile mirrors yours. "Ah, I've...hurt you, haven't I? I'm sorry, Miss Valnikov." And to her credit, she does sound like it, her midnight black eyes wide in apologetic concern. "I did not mean to. It's just that..." The pink-haired girl's voice seems to catch in her throat. "I...we've been through a lot. Her, most especially. She's sacrificed much of herself for me, and I...I cannot throw her sacrifice away in a moment of weakness. Please understand."

At your question, she shakes her head. "Ah, I'm here for...well, other reasons. Mainly, I was supposed to meet with one of the girls, here -- imagine my surprise when I find out that she was one of those who had been taken away from us. It's...it's a sobering revelation, isn't it, Miss Valnikov?" The girl looks up at you. "Please, be careful too. I'd hate to hear about anything bad happening to such a beautiful soul."

You blink at this, and find yourself...touched, somehow. Here was someone who rebuffed your advances, but still took the time to be gentle. She reminds you of Mami, in a way.

"I will be leaving soon enough, though. In fact...probably in a little bit." She glances around, before suddenly smiling. "Here, I may be able to do a last bit of good before I leave. Since I hurt you, would..." It's then that Faust reddens, but she seems to forge on, determined. "...Would you like a small token, from me, before we part?"

...Is she offering you a kiss?

Well.. It could be one of the other Timelines before the Ending of the Anime. Probably one where they both made it to Walpurgisnacht, managed to defeat her and Madoka turns into a witch due to overexerting herself or grief about her friends deaths. Or something like that what somehow fucked up Timejump-Ability and instead of just switching the Timeline we switched to a completly different universe.

I doesn`t explain how Homuhomu ended up in Charlotte`s Barrier though and since her Timejump has a fixed point of several Days before Charlotte`s Appearence that would mean on the other hand that Homuhomu spend quite some time in her Barrier.

I thought it was pretty obvious that this is the world where the grief seed of Madokami's witch ended up. When a witch is killed, a grief seed is always dropped. Godoka's witch was the size of Earth, so of course her grief seed would be huge, like...say, an asteroid, floating out in space. Pinky says that Murderface is a fake because the REAL Homura was personally escorted to Madoka's new world...but at the same time, Madoka "died" when she ceased to exist, so Homura would automatically get sent to another timeline. Homura was taken away, but at the same time, a part of her was tossed back in time, to another world. She's not the Homura that sacrificed so much to save Madoka, but at the same time, she is Homura.

Pinky is Faust, the witch spawned from the greatest wish, currently floating in space waiting for enough grief to accumulate so that she can revive herself, like any witch will if her seed is pumped full of enough despair. Now, imagine: what's the best way to generate enough grief to power herself up? [redacted]

Well the reason why I am convinced that this is post anime is that Faust mentions that Homura has always had a drinking habit in the second episode.

Thinking about it, what was Homura's goal in the anime?
To save Madoka.
And in the end. She FAILED! She utterly failed that goal. While Madoka revamped an unfair system where little girls were at the risk of becoming monsters, Madoka erased herself from reality. Only Homura was the one that remembered her.

If that isn't a case for turning to the bottle, I don't know what is. Especially after the lustre of 'protecting Madoka's new world!' has worn off.

Multiverse, bro. Madokami may only have complete and total control over the universe she exists in -- which is clearly not the one we're in. Homura ended up in that one, but some part of her also ended up thrown into the timeline where Faust's grief seed ended up. The timeline the wish was made in couldn't continue to exist due to the wish itself, but that doesn't mean that the wish fixed everything for every world forever. That grief seed had to end up somewhere, and what better place for it to be than a world that's already so drastically different from the originals that even Homura would barely recognize it? We don't know what all of the timelines Homura saw were like, but it's easy to assume that most of them were pretty similar to each other, with just slight variations. Eventually, though, you're going to reach one that's incredibly unique, containing organizations of magical girls and girls we know exist in other worlds making appearances in some form. At the very least, Madoka's wish worked for the timeline she was in.

>>20813182
It IS possible that, at the end of the road, when Homura was finally going to go to magical girl valhalla with Madokami, she was instead thrown back in time. Again. And ended up in this clusterfuck of a timeline.

There's nothing to cause someone to drink themselves to the point of brain damage or leave themselves to die in a witch barrier like realizing that everything they've ever done was worthless.

Then there is always the Chance that Pinky/Faust isnt a witch at all but something else. Please keep in mind that you can`t communicate with witches and they also turn into abstract monstrosities. Witches are either incapable of communication and are mindless beasts or just show interest in it.

Once again you are struck by how...gentle, and considerate these Japanese girls can be. Sure, discipline and politeness and a certain degree of apathy is bred into their youth - but there are some who consistently surprise you with how warm and caring they are, despite how hard-bitten the world has gotten around them. Despite the fresh sting of rejection, you cannot help but be enchanted by this strange girl with eyes like yours. You cannot help but fall in love, yourself.

It would certainly be a crime to refuse her offer. Smiling, you nod yes, and you stoop slightly just as she beams, both her gloved hands reaching up at you. You feel the warm silkiness of her skin as her arms curl around your neck, and the sugary-sweet scent of her perfume is strong enough that you can actually taste it on your tongue as you breathe in...

And it's then that you feel it. A demure, almost chaste brushing of her lips against yours. Nothing so crass, so direct, so torrid. A maiden's kiss, gentle and sincere and all the more precious. It's so that you close your eyes at the sensation, and you feel tears pricking at the corners of your eyes.

It's then that you feel her letting go, murmuring a hurried goodbye. You catch your name being gasped, and you open your eyes to see her for one last time, before she leaves. To see that which you cannot have.

The moment you do so is the moment you realize that she is gone. Vanished. Disappeared, as if she never were. You blink at this, then glance around, hoping to catch her retreating form.

...No trace of her. None whatsoever. And you'd think you'd be able to see her, with all this white mourning nonsense people are wearing.

Where did she go...? Surely, girls as special as that do not just disappear?

As one of the people who voted to accept, there is still a perfectly in-character reason to reject the offer. Kharn, for all her lascivious lesbian ways, has shown utmost respect for others' relationships. Faust said she was here to meet with another girl, and we're assuming she's offering us a kiss, so we could politely turn it down with the justification of not wanting to impose on their relationship.

>when we timestopped in the Witch that showed up in Mami's house's barrier, she was clearly that Yuuri/Airi girl from Kazumi Magica.

Somehow I think that that part of the plot isn`t even related to Pinky, but to the Saints. If the Saints in this Universe are anything like the ones from the Mango then the Airi/Yurri could oissbly not even been a Witch at all but a victim of those fucking Witch-Nuts. And we just blew her head off.
Heck, it wouldn`t even surprise me if You know who turned Airi/Yuri into a Pseudo-Witch and send her assassinite Mami for whatever reason.

The Saints are even beyond Kirika`s Level of crazy.

You murmur her name, and it's then that you feel a tugging on your left sleeve. You look down to see who it is, and get an eyeful of your new subordinate, Murderface. Looking as sullen as always. And faintly smelling of whisky.

"What were you doing?" She asks you, eyes narrowed behind her glasses. "Malal sent me over to check up on you. You've been standing there for a full minute, not talking to anyone. People are starting to look at you, she says." She glances at the spot where you've been staring at. "...I guess she is sort of pretty..."

Who is? You frown at this, before following her gaze. What you've been standing in front of, it looks like, is a painting of a young woman with long, pink hair. Dressed in a long white gown, almost bridal in make and quality. Wings unfurling behind her, a small beatific smile on her lips. Her eyes closed, as if in reverent prayer.

...Surely, there must be some sort of mistake. Did Murderface not see you talking to anyone with pink hair? In a similarly colored dress?

"What?" Murderface frowns, her eyes narrowing even further. "No. I saw no girl with pink hair. You broke away from us and made a beeline straight for this painting." She tugs at your sleeve again. "Let's go. Malal says the Warmaster is getting impatient."

Impossible. How could she not have seen her? You...are not going crazy, are you?

Slightly unnerved by this, you allow Murderface to pull you along, towards the Gazebo.

Wondering if your corruption is much more serious than you first thought.

It might be a good idea to see if we can get the R&D guys at Siberia to take a look at Midori's soulgem while Chiaki undergoes the process. If that other incubator (Jyubey, I think his name was?) has the ability to create pseudo-witches within all his agents, it might show up.

Since Kyubey's overwritten Midori's contract to be sourced to Chiaki, however, this might be a moot point. Still, never hurts to be sure.

In this instance, he was already giving us several pieces of information which we hadn't specifically asked for as an overview of what Midori's coat turning entailed.

Additionally, if she could be tracked, then she'd be a threat to any part of his operation she went to - which is why he immediately approved her going directly to his most secret research base.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/22/12(Sat)12:43 No.20823000

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

And back then, the idea of going insane was something you weren't really all that comfortable about.

No, no one can call you completely stable and well-adjusted with a straight face. Even you yourself would find it much too ridiculous to even consider yourself as someone who's playing with a complete deck of cards. Even your own Incubator shares the same opinion. Your aide has never said it outright herself, but you know she's just being polite.

But to see things that have never been there to begin with, to talk to pink-haired girls with the same eyes as yours. To flirt with them, long enough that they actually felt bad enough about shooting you down that they gave you a kiss as consolation. only to realize that you've been simply standing all by yourself, staring at a painting, for mere seconds when you could've sworn it had been more than a few minutes.

You've always felt that sanity is overrated.

But at the same time, you're not that much in a hurry to lose your marbles.

As much as you'd like to believe otherwise, you have too much to lose.

>>20823000

You are Valnikov Kharn, Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. It is currently late morning, going to noon - you know this because you're starting to get a bit peckish yourself. At around this time you and your aide would be hitting up a very nice ramen shop downtown called Hanegawa's. Suckin' down on home-made noodles just chock full with good stuff like pork fat, crunchy vegetables and other things you like but cannot be arsed to learn the proper terminologies of(much to your aide's consternation).

You should probably take your new aide there, someday. Perhaps when you're done with this bothersome matter of meeting the Third Incubator's Warmaster, in her pretty little indoors gazebo. You didn't really think this meeting was necessary yourself - but Kyuubey, in his infinite wisdom, had decided that he needed just a bit more proof before letting you do what you want.

What you want, of course, is simple enough: to mobilize the entire Officio into a full-out assault. The Ninth against The Third. A thousand Magical Girls doing their level best to murder another thousand.

The city would be torn apart by the collateral damage alone. A fact that Malal had reminded you of whenever you toyed with the idea of full mobilization. It wa salso a fact that had always cheered you up immensely whenever you thought of it.

A nice, bloody calamity is always good for a city, you had reasoned. If anything, it would give Mitakihara a bit more personality, a bit more history.

>>20823011

You've never liked how so irrepresibly shiny and clean the city was. Even the red-light districts were impossibly neat.

It's a thought that comforts you in your sudden moment of weakness, of vulnerability, as your latest acquisition - a deadly and taciturn time-stopper you've dubbed Murderface - pulls you towards the gazebo where the Third Warmaster is sitting prettily, sipping her freshly-brewed tea in that stiff-looking white kimono of hers. Her long platinum-blonde hair done up in a rather elaborate coif, with golden hairpins securing the entire thing. Her cold blue eyes set firmly on the opened book in front of her, the writing small, spindly and barely readable.

Ahriman. What a stupid name. What kind of name is it, anyway? It is a weak name, a nerdy name. You sneer and open your mouth as you approach the gazebo, about to call her such - maybe it will start something and FINALLY give you an excuse--

"No calling the other Warmaster names, Kharn." Malal quietly murmurs as she comes up beside you, grasping your arm with one hand and pulling out your seat with the other. "Let's start this right. They want things to be peaceful, let's at least try to play along."

You grudgingly acquiesce, settling into your seat, letting your greatcoat drape itself underneath you. Taking off your cap, you place it on the table in front of you, turning it just so that the polished skull at the peak is grinning up at you with empty sockets for eyes.

"I'm glad you're able to take time out of your busy schedule to actually come to one of your appointments in time, Valnikov." The first words out of Ahriman's mouth is condescending enough that you despise her immediately. "From what I've heard of you, all you're good at is taking skulls and seducing other Magical Girls. Not exactly Warmaster material, in my opinion - and I pride myself in always being right."

She says this while not looking up from her book.

Working up a smile on your face, you murmur a small prayer to a blood-soaked diety upon his throne of skulls to help you get through this little farce of a meeting.

Because from the looks of things, you may be making an offering to him soon enough.

How do you respond?

You do not rise to her baiting, choosing to ignore the veiled insult. It is not like it is not the truth, after all, and it is not something you're ashamed of - but to bring up something like that during a formal meeting, well, you know what she's getting at. But you will not give her the satisfaction of getting a rise out of you - you are Valnikov Kharn, after all. You may be wrathful, you may have a temper, but no one in your position should allow such puerile antics to incite them into rage. This is not amateur hour.

Instead, you cut to the chase, leaning both your elbows on the expensive table linen - cradling your chin with one fleshmetal hand, and drumming your fingers on the table with the other. Casually ruining the fabric with your clawtips in the process.

"You wanted to speak of the incident, in which three of your squads failed to kidnap one of my girls, yes?" You say, the smile still on your face. "So speak."

There is no discernible reaction from Ahriman - other than the smallest sigh escaping her lips, and her hand reaching up from underneath the table to gently and carefully close the tome in front of her. A moment more, and she raises her glacier-blue eyes to look at yours - and it's the first time that you realize that if the Third Warmaster actually wiggled the stick out of her ass once in a while, she would actually be a viable choice for you.

It is a pity, because it looks like that stick will not be getting pulled out of there anytime soon.

"No niceties. No pleasantries. No formalities. Just straight to the quick." Ahriman shakes her head. "Well, partly my fault for letting myself get carried away for the moment, but let's push that aside for now. I'm sure you have more urgent matters to attend to, whatever they may be." She seems genuinely taken aback by herself, but any doubt is quickly replaced with a cool, collected sort of determination obviously borne out of confidence, determination, and an ace up her sleeve.

You will have to watch this one carefully, you think.

"Yes, Valnikov Kharn. Let us talk about the three squads - no, the twenty-one Magical Girls who one of your agents slaughtered in cold blood." Ahriman's smile is brittle as she waves a hand - and you see Red Twintails, from earlier, walk up behind her to pass along a rather slim book, bound in black leather. She opens it at the first page, before placing it on the center of the table, turned around so that you could see.

Twenty-one photographs. Headshots of girls smiling in front of the camera, some looking dutiful, others excited, others sullen. Three squads, all of them Eversor rank, as noted by their names at the bottom of each picture.

"Squad Amon, Ankh, and Sobek. Our finest Eversors. Daughters, sisters, all. Now dead, with their soul gems shattered only moments after their bodies were." There is a slight tremble in Ahriman's voice, but only slightly - the rest is acidic, venom-laced steel. "Twenty one souls, Valnikov. That is how much you've bled us. We should be mobilizing against you right this very moment."

What a coincidence, you almost say, were it not for Malal pre-empting you just in time to place a small saucer of sugar cubes - most likely stolen from the tea table beside the gazebo - in front of you, each cube neatly arranged to spell the word 'NO'. Instead, you take one between clawed fingertips delicately and pop it into your mouth, crunching it loud enough for Ahriman to hear. The Third Warmaster's scowl deepens, before she continues, pulling the book back to her and touching the images almost wistfully with an extended finger.

"But no. There will be no mobilization. Mitakihara doesn't deserve to burn under a war between two Officios, not right now. You understand this as much as I do, don't you, Valnikov?" It's then that Ahriman's lips curl gently into a smile. "So, to cut to the chase. I am expecting two actionable deliverables from you, Valnikov Kharn, and they must be given before the day is done. They are non-negotiable."

She takes a moment to sip from her teacup.

"The first is the soul gem of the culprit." Ahriman says, her smile widening just the slightest bit.

"The second is Tomoe Mami herself."

Red Twintails, who had taken her place behind and slightly to the right of Ahriman's chair, smiles beatifically at you.

"Those are my demands. From another Warmaster to another..." Ahriman herself leans forward, smiling behind her steepled fingers. "You can see how I'm letting you off so easily, Kharn."

How do you respond?

now what would they want with Tomoe Mami? the largest mistake she made was not paying close enough attention to Girl A and even if she did do that, there is little one can do to make sure a magical girl with full time stop isn't going anywhere.

does Mami have vital knowledge on the ninth incubator or is this just a way for that stuck up arrogant bitch to get a new plaything?

pancake monopoly!?

or maybe she knows that Mami at one point pulled a golden weapon from her... person.

it is also entirely possible that they want to resurrect Girl A with her soul gem and then keep her under control by keeping Mami captive.

You cannot help yourself. You cannot keep your face straight any longer, no matter how much you try. You canot hold yourself back.

It does not start slowly. Rather, it comes out in a completely unexpected burst, like a taciturn damn suddenly and abruptly exploding into pieces, issuing forth a destructive torrent of hilarity. Your laughter is loud, long, and fills the now graveyard-silent room. No, it is not laughter anymore - it is cackling. You are honest to god cackling. Like a witch, or a crazy grandmother. Such is your amusement at Ahriman's temerity. Such is your surprise at her bald-faced audaciousness. If you had a camera crew recording your reactions, you would have looked towards the direction of the Get A Load Of This Guy Cam and pointed a clawed fingertowards Ahriman herself.

"MALAL!" You cry between gasps of hilarity, leaning over to the side, still cackling as you reachout with both hands, the tears in your eyes blinding you - and you feel more than see your aide come up to your side. You grasp at her arm with both hands, and shake her. "Did...did you hear what she had said, to me? Did I not hear her correctly?" You giggle as you look up at her tinted visor, and she nods quietly.

"What did you think about it?" You ask her, and she shakes her head before shrugging, as if exasperated that she had to say it herself.

"It's dildos."

"DILDOS!" You exclaim, loudly, slamming a clawed hand into the table, the noise sharp enough that even Red Twintails seem to jump slightly at it. You look around, and point at Murderface, who is staring daggers at Ahriman. "Y-you! Little girl, on the street! Hahaha...w-what do you think?"

This seems to snap her out of her murderous stupor, and the young woman blinks behind her glasses, clearly nonplussed. "It's...it's dildos?"

"DILDOS! AGAINS!" You slap the table again in a thunderous impact, still cackling your own merry way. "Do you see, Ahriman? Do you see what we think about your actionable deliverables, or what do you call them?"

Ahriman's scowl deepens. "It hardly matters what your underlings think about them, that is my offer. And it is dildoES, not dildos--"

You cut her off with a wave of your hand as you finally manage to calm yourself down, the cackling subsiding into mere giggling. "Ah, very sorry. Have not cackled like that in some time. Last time, I was enjoying a joke, about one of our own Vindicares killing three squads of Eversors all by herself." This almost sends you into another round of hysterics, had it not for the fact that you are currently feeling everyone else in the room glaring at you.

"Maybe you know that joke? Is okay, I will tell you soon. Anyway, yes, for your two demands." You hold up two clawed fingers. "The first, the...culprit's soul gem, you ask? Well, I cannot give it to you. Impossible. Cannot be done."

"But why--"

"Because there is nothing left of it!" You smile at the Third Warmaster. "I have done it before you have even asked! Girl A, as we refer to her, is dead! Extinct! Removed from existence! Body burned to ashes, gem reduced to powder! If you still persist on that, then you will be making me root in my Officio's garbage bin, to give her to you with a dustpan!"

Ahriman only scowls at this, before shaking her head. "Yes, well, about Tomoe Mami, then. I--"

"No. Nyet." It's then that you let the friendly, jovial smile fall from your face, so quickly and so completely that those looking upon you at the time would wonder if you had ever been smiling at all.

"This thing, asking me to hand over Tomoe Mami to you like some borrowed pair of underwear? No, no, that is not happening." You shake your head. "It will never happen, so long as I am Warmaster, so long as I am required by my rank of office to wear this very fetching hat."

You take your hat from its place on the table and wave it at her direction. "I do not deal with traitors, cowards, fools and bullies, nor will I use my own girls as barter pieces. If you want Tomoe Mami, woo her and make her yours, but I will not hand her over to you like some piece of meat."

Ahriman's eyes narrow at you, and you return her venomous glare with one of your own. "Do consider what you're saying here, Kharn. You are at the cusp of forcing my hand. We have lost three squads to you, while the only thing you've lost is...one unstable psycopath who managed to win the Incubator Lottery as far as abilities as concerned." At this, Murderface visibly stiffens. "The balance must be restored, and I am offering you a way to do so without any more bloodshed. Tomoe Mami is just one girl, out of your thousand. Surely you can allow a trade of two souls for twenty one?"

How do you respond?

Only that torturing Megucas is completly retarded. Thanks to the Soulgems they barely feel any pain at all.

The Soulgem-Liking did give me an Idea on how you could possibly torture a Meguca without causing bodily harm nor destroying her Soulgem.

If they can be dipped in Alcohol and liked, I wonder what would happen I we put a Soulgam in say... boiling water.

Not that it makes the Idea any better, press them too much and they witch out on you due to Suffering-Overload.

And it was widely used for that, and only for that. When an inquisitor asked you if you were a witch, he didn't want the truth. He just wanted you to acknowledge it and sign a pre-written confession.

You shake your head. You are starting to get annoyed at this. You are decided; you do not like the new Warmaster of the Third Incubator. Well, if you are honest, most of the other Warmasters you do not agree with, except for a special few. Being an Incubator's proxy can do certain things to a person's idea of self-worth and confidence. You would hacve probably turned out the same, if you did not have someone like Malal by your side at that moment.

Still, this Ahriman...she is clearly hiding something. SHe had not said a word about the alleged 'kidnapped' girls, or what Girl A - now Murderface - had heard the squad leaders sniggering about. Add to this the...relative generosity of her offer. No Warmaster worth her sexy hat would even think about such a trade. Twenty-one souls for two? Had you been Ahriman, you would have mobilized, right away, no meetings. Blood for blood, soul for soul. No negotiations, no delays, no sneering and jeering over a linen table. You would not do any mourning - you would respect the dead by making their murderers do the mourning for you.

You drum your clawed fingertips into the table, before leaning forward again.

"Alright. Time for giggles and funny ha-ha is done now. That is in the past. Serious, now, no more tricks." You point one brutally-clawed skeletal finger at her. "You like to hear yourself talk, very much. Okay, I can understand. You have nice voice. Now tell me, so the both of us can hear you talk more, why you want Tomoe Mami so much. We have been talking and you have never given me one single reason to consider it - besides you talking about balance or some kind of stupid nonsense like that."

Ahriman narrows her eyes at you, before shaking her head. A smirk curling her lips.

"Kharn, please. We both know that this is not your area of expertise. I would be wasting my time - and yours - if I tried to explain everything to you in a way that you can understand." She lets out a sigh. "Can't you just accept the fact that I'm simply trying to mend this...obviously strained relationship between our Officios? We don't need to fight. Full mobilization is something I dare not take lightly, even in these conditions. I am willing to bear the shame of having lost three Eversor squads in my command, and so much more. Just let us have Tomoe Mami, and we can all go back to our lives. Especially yours."

It's then that her smirk turns cruel, ugly almost. "Hiding your...disgusting, cancerous corruption. I can smell it myself, even before you've entered my building. Where is it up to now, Kharn?"

You find yourself stunned at this, feeling your body grow cold - except for your hands, which seem to grow just the tiny bit warmer. How...how could she have known? No one knew. Only Kyuubey and Malal, no one else--

"Surprised? I'm not. I've spent much of my career studying and perfecting what's been given to me, except of shooting or hacking away at mortals and Witches. I know more than you can possibly know, and have more strength in my little finger than you have in your entire body." The smile in Ahriman's voice is obvious as she raises one hand to her side - and a bolt of golden electricity snaps into existence into her hand, solidifying into a brilliant gold hequin staff, topped by a hissing snake head, fangs reared to strike.

"Magic. Something you Girls have forsaken in lieu of swords and guns and other pointy things. How can you call yourselves Magical Girls even if you've left the first part out so much?"

"The Officio of the Ninth Incubator is certainly strong, strong enough for us to take stock and consider other places to take root in. But consider, for one moment, if the other Officios were to catch wind of the Ninth's Warmaster being...compromised, as she is now. That would create problems for you, wouldn't it? What would Nero say? What would that...that abberrant girl from America say?"

Her smile turns almost wicked, a grin.

"What would your father say, Valnikov Kharn? To see his daughter reduced to such a slovenly, diseased state? What will he say when he sees what they've done to his poor, sickly...Katerina?"

Murderface is looking at you, and so is Malal. Not to mention the entire room of white-shrouded Magical Girls, all of which seem to have their hands on their Soul Gems for some reason.

Silence. And then, a quiet snort from your aide.

"...Katerina? That's...cute."

How do you respond?

"One moment, please." You smile as you raise one brutally-clawed finger into the air, your other hand taking your smartphone from your inventory. The dinged, scratched-up device chimes to life as you carefully input QB's number onto the screen, before holding it up to your ear. Three rings, and the Incubator answers, in his usual fashion.

"Yes? What is it, Kharn?"

You smile at Ahriman, before you reply.

"Negotiations are not going as planned. I am sorry, Kyuubey, but I will have to ask for you to consider full mobilization." You laugh, despite yourself. "Also, I am going to kill everyone in this building. No matter what you say."

"...I will consider it, Valnikov Kharn. Good hunting."

The line is severed, and you stand up, all smiles, carefully placing the battered device back into your inventory. The rest of the Third's Magical Girls - with the exception of Red Twintails and Ahriman - steps back as you do so.

"You insult...a guest." You say as you replace your sexy cap on your head, making sure that it is a flawless fit, and not crimping any strands of hair. "You threaten those who come in peace." You straighten the back of your greatcoat, and dust off imaginery lint from your skulled epaulettes. "You use mourning for the dead to disguise your plots." Finally, you step back from your chair, replacing it neatly where Malal had pulled it from.

"You are no Warmaster, you are a thug, a cruder child than one raised in a Siberian gulag."

"I will give the death you so desperately want, Ahriman. I swear it by the name I gave up."

Beside you, Malal is reaching behind her helmet, turning what appears to be a dial affixed to the collar of her suit. You smile at this, slightly, before reaching your hand out to your newest acquisition.

"Murderface. Bring me Skulltaker."

A shriek splits the tension in the room, followed by a deafening sound of splitting metal - and your subordinate flickers into existence beside you, the scarred shield on her arm clicking. Holding out the black length of Skulltaker to you, which you gratefully grab by the handle.

Ahriman's sneer is cloying, and yet you see a trickle of sweat drip down her cheek. Crimson lighting, blinding and acrid, crackles along the golden staff in her hands. "You ignorant fool--"

You and your retinue, in that perfect moment of clarity, did not wait for them to attack.

All three of you were already running forward. Towards Ahriman.

"DEATH TO THE COWARDS OF THE THIRD INCUBATOR!" You cackle, the deafening roar of Skulltaker joining you in bloodthirsty chorus.

Malal and Murderface take up your war cry.

"BLOOD FOR THE BLOOD GOD!"

Since this might be the last thread of the flashback, i think i'll leave this here even if the thread is done for the day...

>Apparently, we need to inform Kharn that Souji said she has nice... Mamis.

>We also seem to have forgotten to share Mami's greetings with Kharn

>Get an Ushanka hat for Kyouko.

>If we have to go under for a month to resist the corruption, we should let everyone who likes us know we'll be delayed. Luckily, this is a very short list. Mami, Kyouko (inquire after recovery and impending Hue), Iori, Pinky (lol), am i missing anyone?

>We may want to call [Kaname Madoka] and [???] again sometime to see if they start working.

>In addition to the killswitch, we can apparently track and 'take control' of Midori through the soul link, which could be... interesting. We might try it to see how it works. (We could literally make her hips move on their own!)

>On the subject of green and eager, we should probably have a talk with her. Suggested topics - Golden weapons/Pinky/FoFA, we're a bad end waiting to happen to her, she seems a bit stockholm syndrome.

>Oriko is still out there and probably still incredibly mad. We should keep an eye on that, she could easily make a wish for vengeance.

>Fabiola's meido boss has issues she'll want to pester us about eventually.

>We might ask how and how much Kharn knows about golden weapons.

>If we actually end up Warmastering, we'll need an aide. Midori has trust issues with the rest of the officio, and Kyoko and Sayaka come as a pair, so, there's problems/fun either way.

>After all, remember, Betrayer gonna Betray.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/25/12(Tue)12:19 No.20864527

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

And you really, really enjoyed killing other Magical Girls.

You'd never admit that to anyone, of course. Not even if they asked nicely. Not even if they were blonde. You know better than to feed the rumor mills, after all.

You don't want loose lips and gossipy souls to turn you into a bloodthirsty, rapacious monster.

No, you wanted to do that yourself, thank you very much. You wanted your deeds to speak for themselves. You wanted to be a legend, one not built upon half-heard lies and exaggerated untruths, but by undisputable fact. The ruined bodies that you would often leave in your wake would not only stand as examples, but also as proof.

The best legends, after all, were the ones carved into mountains of corpses and drowned in rivers of blood.

Your father taught you that, and he was a very brutal man.

He had to be. He married your mother, after all.

A jailer's wife. A war criminal's husband.

...Well, never let it be said that you never took after either of them.

You are Valnikov Kharn, Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. Being Warmaster, of course, meant that you were the proxy of the Incubator himself - you had complete and utter authority over a thousand Magical Girls, free to commandeer any and all resources in the Officio. It meant that the only authority that could countermand yours was the Incubator's - and he rarely ever objected to your whims, as you've found out in your tour of duty.

This was one of those rare moments, and one you can't exactly blame him for. You had wanted to declare war upon the Third Officio after hearing Girl A - now Murderface's - story; you wanted a Full Mobilization order authorized after hearing how they had plotted to kidnap and rape Tomoe Mami.

You had been chomping at the bit to declare a thousand Magical Girls guilty of plotting against your Officio, you wanted to see them burn for their treachery. You wanted each and every one of their skulls added to your collection, possibly to make a nice throne or two out of the delightful things. The comfy sort of throne, mind, one you can take it well easy in.

Kyuubey, in his infinite and alien wisdom, had asked you to reconsider. Well, not so much asked as told you to try and get more proof; something a bit more substantial than the half-murmured growlings of a Magical Girl stoic enough to the point of autism. You acquiesced, and with Murderface and your aide, Malal, you had willingly strode into a death trap of the Third Officio's making.

An overestimation, of course - you were, after all, only fifty stories above ground, in a closed environment, surrounded by a hundred enemy Magical girls and their own Warmaster. A Warmaster who, if Kyuubey's intel is to be believed, is capable of vaporizing another Magical Girl by a single word alone.

Only a hundred.

They should have brought a hundred more.

A hundred is nowhere near enough to satisfy you. Not at all.

Skulltaker was only a hair's breadth away from shearing Ahriman's head from her neck when her stunned underlings had begun to move. Hilariously, it seemed that they were actually expecting you to cede to their Warmaster's wishes, and was not expecting you to react in such a manner. Well, for the latter part, you do not blame them - who responds with such violence, with such naked hunger for blood and combat? Who in their right mind, what with being outnumbered to such a degree, trapped behind enemy lines, would even consider offensive action?

Who would be so insane as to attack a Warmaster right in the middle of her own tea party?

"KHARN!" Ahriman shrieks at you as she is dragged away by Red Twintails, so unceroniously pulled out of the way of Skulltaker's decapitating swing by the collar of her own kimono. "KHARN, YOU FOOL, DON'T DO THIS--"

The green-haired Magical Girl that had interposed herself between you and her Warmaster, however, was not so lucky, despite her raising the haft of her silver halberd in a vain attempt to guard against your strike. As if slicing through butter, your chainblade had gone through her weapon, armor, skin and bone in one messy, blood-spattering whine of chewing chainteeth.

You cackled as you shouldered your way through the organic wreckage, the twitching heaps of flesh thudding wetly onto the carpeted floor, the blood darkening the already-crimson material.

Two others have intercepted your retinue, and had met the same grisly fates. Even without looking, you've sensed Murderface flickering out of sight just as her attacker swung her sword - only to flicker back into reality behind the Magical Girl, in mid-step, one hand stretched back, fingers curled around an oversized revolver. She never even gave her victim a second look before blowing the back of her head open with the pull of a trigger.

Malal's handiwork, while not as flashy, is just as purposeful, just as deliberate. Her attacker, one sporting some sort of electrified gauntlets, had made the mistake of waiting for your aide to strike first - and Malal did not disappoint, ducking into a lunging tackle that slammed the Magical Girl solidly into the floor.

Unclipping the crowbar from her back - Murderface must have given it to her at the same time as she had recovered your sword - she swings the heavy, cast-iron tool like a maul, downward, right into the girl's face. Once. Twice. The third one seeing the girl's face ruined beyond recognition, and her struggling ceasing into a corpse's final twitches.

As all three of you straighten and stand in formation, the shivering gazebo behind you collapses loudly, wood and glass and steel crashing together.

"Huh." Malal's voice is almost cheerful. "I was beginning to think you'd let that ugly thing stand, Kharn."

What? Of course not. Gazebos are evil, you remind her.

"KHARN, YOU LOW-BORN, COMMONER FILTH!" Ahriman's voice, only moments earlier smooth, silken and cold - is now rough, bestial almost, tainted with the unwomanly edge of rage and fury. More and more of her Magical Girls, still in their white mourning colors, gather in front of her in a protective phalanx, baring weapons, baring teeth, narrowing eyes. The air is acrid with the ozone of spent magic, brought about by a hundred transformations at once. "HOW DARE YOU? HOW -COULD- YOU?! Has the corruption truly taken your mind?!"

You laugh, licking your lips where a traitor's blood had splattered onto, tasting their last moments alive.

More, the voice inside your growls. More blood. More skulls. More souls.

How do you respond?

You know, I have to wonder if her Incubator knows about this. I've had the feeling that there might be a "right hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing" thing going.

Yes, but we wanted to mobilize the entirety of the 9th Officio into all-out open war with the 3rd, turning an entire city into a battleground between Magical Girls, with the civilian populace caught between them. The collateral damage alone from area-effect magic would have been in the thousands.
And that was BEFORE Pinky's kiss.

If she's trying to get us to start a bloodbath, it's what we, both Kharn and the players, wanted in the first place. I don't really see her influence, to be honest.

Thought of something else witty, short, and showing the proper amount of care, respect, and gravitas appropriate to the situation:

"I don't like your face."
"The Warmaster has a problem, and it's your face."

Some possible battle music. The length is due to it being a compilation of the themes I believe -- so there's actually multiple themes in one video.

The first two in the beginning are pretty catchy.

"Sure likes to hear herself talk, this one." Malal murmurs beside you, whipping her crowbar to the side, dislodging flecks of skull, blood and brain matter from the tool's curved striking edge. "Now, this isn't the way I would have handled it, Kharn, but you're the Warmaster here. What say we do this by the book for a change, eh?"

By the book? You turn towards her, frowning, the whirring chain-teeth of Skulltaker chewing air as you let the massive chainblade idle. But doing it by the book is boring, you reason. It is not as fun as, say, engaging in complete and wanton slaughter. You want to reduce this entire room into a charnel house. None will be let alive, save for all three of you.

"...I shouldn't even have bothered, then." There's a resigned note in Malal's voice despite the vox-corruption stealing all warmth and humanity in her words - but she leans over to unsheathe her combat knife from her ankle. "By your will, then, Warmaster. Let's get you that skull throne you've always wanted." She glances past you. "Murderface?"

"Ready since half a minute ago," Comes the terse, if not irritated reply, and you turn to smile at the sullen Magical Girl who is currently wielding what appears to be two handguns, each with an extended magazine. Both their barrels gently wafting smoke. "...Did you two just wait for them to get into a more defensible position, or are you two crazy?"

Malal's stifled laughter comes across almost insultingly clearly, and you grin at Murderface just as you start to move.

It was always more exciting, you explain amidst laughter, to give the enemy hope just before you kill them.

here is a quick thought, Pinky thought Murderface was dead, at the beginning of the quest the 'witch' in Mami's place recognized the still very much though depressingly alive Chiaki Murderface Matsuda and spoke the name Homura.

what if, Pinky can see what other witches see? or if she can see through witches she has helped into existence?

maybe she has an extensive information net connecting all the witches ever?

Perception dulls, as it always does in moments like these. Even with your senses honed through your training - and amplified by your corruption - you could never really recall a battle of this kind of proportion completely. It had always been partial, snatches of sight and sound and sensation, rather than one complete, continuous memory.

You were laughing when you charged Ahriman's protective phalanx, Murderface and Malal by your side. You were the only one cackling as you carved into weapon and wielder with Skulltaker, laying about left and right with the snarling chainblade set to MAIM. The two members of your retinue silent as they contributed to your efforts in thinning out the Third Warmaster's guard, adding to the slaughter in their own ways.

You remember bisecting an auburn-haired girl wielding a scythe at the waist, and then shearing her head off her shoulders with the return slice.

A heartbeat later, you briefly locked blades with a fellow chainblade user, the teeth of your weapons grinding against each other in a shower of sparks before Skulltaker bites through her own blade, then her arms, and then her face. Splitting her in half from skull to groin. A waste of skull, you remember thinking.

The gunshots and dull cracks of bone and flesh being split by expertly-wielded metal are all you hear of your two companion's handiwork, but even in your bloodlust you can tell that they are doing just fine in this melee. Murderface in particular - she seems to almost be toying with Ahriman's underlings, standing completely still as if to present a tempting target, before disappearing at the last second and then murdering the enterprising attacker with a point-blank shot to the face. And it would always be the face - as if she was trying to reduce each Magical Girl she killed into featureless corpses, into nothing but bags of bone and meat.

Curiously, she does not shoot their soul gems out. Rather, she either picks them up to crush it in her hand or beneath her heel. As if wanting to end their lives in a more personal way, a more intimate manner. Despite the shards and metal cutting into her palm, making her bleed.

Truly, you recruited someone special.

After what seems like mere moments - even though you can already feel the burn of lactic acid in your arms from wielding Skulltaker for quite an extended period of time - you stop to take stock of your surroundings. A good time, too, considering that there was a rather sizeable chunk of meat clogging your chainblade's teeth. You let the weapon idle as you look around at the bloody devastation you've just made.

You are standing in the middle of an abattoir. Bodies - or what used to be bodies - lie around you in pieces, reduced to biological wreckage. Greasy stinking ropes of offal lie in puddles next to disemboweled corpses, some of them still burning from when you switched Skulltaker to BURN mode; others cleanly decapitated (clearly the fortunate ones). Murderface's victims, ever distinctful, die with their brain pans emptied out in the expensive carpeting, lying facedown in their own muck, cold dead fingers grasping weapons that will never again see combat.

A hundred Magical Girls. At least ten, fifteen squads. Adding to the slain three that had started this entire debacle.

A hundred more souls added to your legend, with the help of your friends.

Which leaves, of course, only two other Magical Girls left in the room besides you and your two companions.

Red Twintails, with her serrated katana.

And Ahriman, Warmaster of the Third Incubator, with her golden hequin staff.

To her credit, Red Twintails seems to be the very picture of cool, calm serenity - holding her weapon in both hands, her own white dress unstained of blood, placing herself between you and her Warmaster with no less than patrician grace. Ahriman herself is spotless, save for a drop or two staining the hems of her kimono.

In filthy contrast, all three of you are panting slightly, your fronts dripping crimson, hands and feet and claws caked with gore.

"My...my friends...my comrades..." Ahriman chokes from behind Red Twintails, her ice-blue eyes wide. "I...I did not think you would..."

"Yes, yes, you never thought we were crazy enough to actually do it. We are, and we have." Malal speaks up for you, picking off pieces of hair-ridden scalp from her crowbar. Murderface, on the other hand, is fussily cleaning her glasses. "Honestly, did you expect anything less from someone like Kharn?"

"Please, stay behind me, Warmaster." Red Twintails murmurs, her crimson eyes clear as she keeps her gaze locked at you. Refreshingly, there is no hatred in her face, nor indignation. Just a clear, almost honest dutifulness. "I will protect you."

It looks like you've got the upper hand, now. What do you do?

I'm not sure we should even bother hearing out Ahriman, she seems like the type of backstabbing schemer that would just try to get us to hesitate for a moment so she can run away and claim we betrayed her. This whole situation could be a set up with the killed magical girls just a sacrifice to make us look bad.

Of course, if that is the case, she's going to get away no matter what we do as this is a flashback and we're already called the Betrayer in the present.

"You have only yourself to blame. You schemed against my people, then did your best to earn a Darwin Award during negotiations by provoking, insulting, refusing to explain your demands, and threatening and blackmailing a bloodthirsty Warmaster who puts the 'laughter' back into 'slaughter.'

You won't survive this.

You stab Skulltaker into the floor beside you, leaning upon it like one would a cane as you smile at this very admirable display of noble, steadfast fealty. It takes a rather special soul - one ironclad in loyalty and determination - to keep standing with her liege to keep her would-be murderers at bay.

Moreso when one takes into consideration the amount of souls you've just reaved the room clean of, their bodies strewn all over the room like so much carrion.

Anyone else would have made a run for it, really. You wouldn't have held it against against Red Twintails if she simply had left Ahriman to die - you were all still young women despite your circumstances. It is all too human, all too natural to succumb to the instinct of self-preservation.

But despite all of this, despite seeing you and your retinue make short work of so many of her comrades - Red Twintails remains unshaken, unperturbed. Her conviction pristine, unbreakable. Her will and resolve intact.

In a way, you are kind of jealous. It's with Magical Girls like Red Twintails that Officios are made and broken. Like Malal, like Murderface, it would only take one of them to turn a mere hostile conflict into a bloodbath.

You need more girls like them, you think.

"Kharn?" Malal murmurs beside you, one gloved hand wiping away a sheen of crimson from the visor of her helmet. "Let's get this done. Maybe we'll make it in time for Hanegawa's Two-For-One Lunch Special." The smile in her vox-corrupted voice is obvious. "It'll be my treat this time."

You resist the urge to laugh, and shush your aide. Such familiarity would be considered anathema in any other Officio, but you know that Malal is just poking fun at the now-trembling Warmaster standing behind her stalwart protector. After all, it's not everyday you can give a Warmaster about to die a good ribbing, and your aide, of all people, would not let such an opportunity to waste.

"There is a reason," You say after a moment, once you have willed your grin into one that's markedly less predatory and more conciliatory. "...why the position of Warmaster is not something given through honor duels. At least, not anymore." Ahriman blinks at you, uncertainly, unsure as to where you might be going with this, while Red Twintails continues to stare at you in stony silence.

"I will share with you this truth, eh?" Your smile becomes affable, almost friendly. "The best choice for Warmaster is not the most powerful Magical Girl in your Officio. The best choice is the Girl who can command her friends, her allies, her comrades to their deaths--" you gesture around you, at the surroundings you've made into a charnel house. "...and be able to stomach the consequences, no matter what they turn out to be. It is being able to stand and fight, even with the burden of your allied dead on your shoulders trying to kill you, that makes for even a halfway decent candidate for Warmaster."

You extend one brutally-clawed fleshmetal finger at Ahriman. "You killed your previous Warmaster in a duel. Hooray hooray for you, much congratulations. You have proven that you are very good with that pretty stick. But it did not prove that you are capable of being accountable for a thousand souls, no. Or even a hundred."

Make it more visceral and with more SFX in a seinen manga sort of way (DOGS, Shingeki no Kyojin, Broken Blade...). The whole red streak thing is cheapening the impact. You need more things going on there, like the body coming apart at the point of impact, the meat sputtering out from the teeth of the chainsword, etc.

Lowering your hand, you tug Skulltaker out of the floor. "So, in cognizance of your being total dildos at being Warmaster, Ahriman, I will give you one last chance to redeem yourself. It is not a chance I give to everyone, you know. It is limited time offer."

Skulltaker rumbles in your grip as the chainteeth slowly begin to move, cycling to clear any chunks of meat that may be clogging the tracks. "Surrender yourself and submit to summary execution, right here in the ruins of your own mistakes, and I will let the remainder of your Officio live. You still have the better part of nine hundred souls to save, if I am being clever with Math." You allow your smile to widen, just a bit more. "You have my word that I will hold up my end of the bargain if you do. A Valnikov's word may not be much, but I am saying this in front of my aide, and she is not someone I lie to." Malal chuckles at this. "Refuse, however, and I will use all of my authority to erase the Third Officio. I will pursue this matter to its final, futile stupidity."

Ahriman grits her teeth at this, her eyes narrowing, sweat trickling down her brow - the white-knuckled grip on her staff trembling. You can almost see her consider your offer, see the play of muscles of her neck twitch as she swallows with a dry throat. You would have pitied her, if not for the fact that you're having too much fun seeing her squirm.

She opens her mouth to talk, but Red Twintails interjects, her voice ringing clear in the blood-clogged air of an abattoir.

"The choice you offer is no choice at all, Warmaster Kharn." She says this with a soft, clear voice, free of hostility, of posturing, of any airs. "My Warmaster handled the situation as best she could, with experience and knowledge available to her. She can easily stand - and walk - with the burden of authority and accountability, no matter how insurmountable it gets. Our comrades are dead, yes, added to the souls we have been mourning, and we will mourn them as well - but I will not stand here and listen to you spit on her title."

She risks a glance towards Ahriman. "My Warmaster, leave this place. Get back to our Officio. Seek succor with the rest of our sisters." Red Twintails turns back at you, her eyes pure steel. "I will hold them back for as long as I can."

"Erebus, I--" Ahriman stutters, hesitation clear in her eyes, her face, her voice. "I can't leave you, they'll--"

"PLEASE. LEAVE." Red Twintails - or Erebus, as she has been called - all but snarls. "I will kill the heretic Warmaster and her underlings. I will follow you as soon as I can." Reaching behind her, she grabs her Warmaster by the shoulder and pushes her roughly back, nearly sending her toppling on her bottom. "GO!"

Crying, sobbing now, Ahriman murmurs unspoken words that echo in your ears, migraine-loud. A ring of light etching itself around her, arcane script and lettering manifesting with every moment.

It looks like the Third Warmaster is trying to escape.

You nod slightly at Murderface's direction. It's with a small, annoyed sigh and the harsh clicking of metal that she winks out of existence - reappearing at the same time that a gunshot rings out, nearly eclipsing the scream of pain that followed it. Three more reports follow it.

"That was anti-climactic." Malal says after a moment. Red Twintails - Erebus - is still unmoving, her sword still drawn en garde, waiting for you to make your first move. Your aide sounds almost disappointed. "Well, that's that, I think. Kharn, let's just leave her to pick up the pieces. I'll make a report--"

Malal never gets to finish her sentence as the unconscious - and singed - body of one Murderface is sent flying through the air, crashing right into your aide and slamming them against the nearby wall. You blink at this for a moment, and it's then that you turn to see Ahriman pull herself back up on her feet, using the golden hequin staff in her hand for support. The strange, arcane weapon crackling with migraine-bright forks of black electricity.

She is bleeding, you note. Four gunshot wounds, all of them grouped tightly on top of her left breast, right where her heart should be. It seemed that even Murderface seemed amenable to granting small mercies - unfortunately, it proved to be her own undoing, as it didn't quite finish Ahriman off.

Instead, it just seemed to make her angrier.

Her eyes no longer a bright blue, but now an abysmal black, mirroring yours.

"...Ahriman?" Even Erebus seems surprised - if not taken aback - by this change that had come over the Warmaster. "Ahriman, is that--"

"The ordained Hour," Ahriman smiles, her voice clear, her own, and at the same time not quite. As if two souls were now speaking through one mouth. "What She promised me. What She promised us. One hundred lives, one hundred souls, drawn by a Heretic. Only then would her gift come to fruition." It's then that she smiles, revealing perfect teeth pinked with blood. "I...I feel it, Erebus. The power to destroy a world, at my fingertips, rushing in my veins, riding my blood. It feels...it feels magnificent."

"I...I knew it," Erebus replies after a moment, her voice trembling with emotion, tears welling up in her eyes - the serrated katana aimed at you shaking by the slightest bit. "I knew She would not abandon us. She would not deny us her blessing at our time of need." A shuddering inhalation. "T-The Blessed Lady...t-truly protects, Ahriman."

"She does. And She rewards our unwavering faith with the power to lay waste to our enemies." The Third Warmaster laughs, before turning towards you. "Ah, Kharn. You must allow me to thank you for being so predictable. It only took a handful of gutter threats and unreasonable demands to get you to do my work for me - which, I would've done myself, if it werent' so..." Her beautiful face crinkles slightly with distaste. "...untidy. Leave the wetwork to the butchers and savages, I always say - and true to form, you did." She curtseys, smiling. "For that I am grateful."

You bite back a scathing response to that, and instead speak your aide's name.

Her reply is not a very encouraging one, but at least she's still with you.

"I'm...I'm okay. God dammit." Her vox-corrupted voice breathes out a curse, and you note with some worry that it seems her voxcaster has been damaged, more static obscuring her words. "Murderface isn't. She's knocked out completely. Still alive, though, but I doubt she'll wake up before this dance is over." It's then that you sense her at your side. "Jesus, that hurt. I think I'll need to take a few personal days after this."

You turn slightly to smile at your aide, before reminding her that she'd already taken two personal days off last week.

"No, those don't count, Kharn." Despite the obvious pain in her voice - and the way she seems to favor her right leg - the smile behind her helm's visor is audible. "That was the weekend. They're supposed to be our normal days off. Snow-shoveling yokel."

"If you're quite done with your banter," Ahriman suddenly cuts into your conversation with your aide, the brittle smile on her face. "Then might I bring your attention back to more pressing matters? Specifically, the matter about Tomoe Mami." It's then that the Warmaster steps forward, confident now, one hand coming upon Erebus's shoulder. "I believe it is clear who has the upper hand, now. With the Blessed Lady's gift, I can erase your Officio just as easily as I can take you apart, atom by atom." Witch fire sparks from her eyes. "Let us try this again, Kharn, and more slowly, so that you can comprehend my terms properly."

She points the golden hequin staff at you.

I actually doubt Malal would be able to take Arhiman even with anti-magic, but she should be able to buy us some time to kill Erebus. She's a crazed cultist so there's no need to give her a proper fight, just smash her so we can focus on the big bad.

I honestly think trying to take both of them at once on our lonesome would just be bad if they coordinate well.

If we're going to have Malal stand back and do the anti-magic thing, we should definitely tell her to play our favorite music on her smartphone.

This duty is, of course, to be undertaken with as much seriousness and gravitas as her role of keeping Ahriman from atomizing us. Naturally.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/27/12(Thu)11:54 No.20891621

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

And you have always considered those days the best in your life.

Especially the days when you get to kill other Magical Girls, collecting their skulls as trophies.

Funnily enough, your parents would have disapproved, if either of them were still around to chastise you.

Your father liked collecting his enemies' weapons better than their body parts.

As for your mother, Well, she did neither. But she loved cats a great deal, despite being allergic to them. So instead, she took photographs of them doing silly things.

You will never not be embarrassed by your parents.

In retrospect, they are not very brutal.

>>20891621

You are Valnikov Kharn, infamous Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. You are a pretty big deal. Your rank, as signified by your intimidating hat full of sex appeals which you are wearing on your head at this exact moment gives you the authority to command a thousand magical girls to do anything you want. Of course, you try not to abuse your authority. Mainly because you do not want to be That Warmaster who the entire Officio just completely detests and may not survive the next 'accident' she unfortunately experiences. Also, you do not want your aide, Malal to be disappointed in you.

Because Malal is your friend. Your best friend.

You will never admit it to anyone, including her, but you will be very sad when she dies.

Not even Tomoe Mami will be able to console you.

Well, maybe after a few nights--no, no. Never. No one.

The moment Malal stops being your aide for whatever reason is the moment you pack your bags and go back home to Siberia.

Because it will never be as fun without her. It will never be as great without her.

And you will miss her enough that you will end up distracted for one second too long - and someone will take advantage of that and put an end to your misery.

You know at least one thing for sure, though.

If Malal dies by anyone else's hand other than yours, you will burn the entire world if it meant catching her murderers in the flames.

It is with this in mind - and common sense - that you decide to have her hang back as anti-magic support in your little duel with the Third Warmaster and the sole remainder of her retinue. This is a common enough tactic between the both of you - she would shadow your every move, entirely defensive, and prepare herself to counter any offensive magical attack sent your way or hers. You yourself will engage Ahriman and Erebus at the same time.

You convey this to her with a pointed glance, nothing more, and she nods in understanding. Malal then reaches back with a gloved hand, turning a heavily-ratcheted dial at the back of her helmet. Lines in her suit start to glow with white light, then blue, before settling on amber. The lines terminating at her hands, which begin to glow with a faint orange aura.

The suits, a brilliant invention of Kyuubey's own devising, allow Culexus to weaponize their nulling abilities by channeling them into fields, auras or even projectiles. This not only let them control their anathemic power much more finely, but also prevented them from burning out all the faster. The only tradeoff, of course, was that a suited Culexus would not be as powerful as an unsuited one. Not as effective. Not as potent.

It also meant that you would not see her rot away into a dessicated husk after only three years of active service.

That suited you just fine. Malal, after all, was the most powerful Culexus in the Officio. She could shut down even the most devastating magical attack sent her way without so much as straining herself, and that was with the suit on. She was not leader of the Culexus for nothing.

You would deal with this and so much more, if it meant being able to enjoy her company for but a moment longer.

"It's just too bad that Murderface isn't conscious to enjoy this, isn't it?" Malal's vox-corrupted voice, crackling with static, is quiet but amused. "It's not everyday you get to kill a Warmaster."

You smile as you agree. It is much too unfortunate, but there is nothing to be done. You will just make sure to tell her an accurate recounting of the events that led to you getting two new skulls for your collection.

"Where is this confidence coming from, Kharn?" Ahriman says, seemingly having caught your conversation. Erebus, by her side A sweet, cloying stink coming off her, her black eyes gleaming as warp-fire licks at her."You do realize that you are hopelessly outmatched? This battle you're yearning for - you've lost it before you've even begun. I have a god on my side, my weapon her will made form." She laughs, a horrible grating sound. "What do YOU have, heretic? A snarling chainsaw and a Culexus? I..."

"Here we go again." Malal murmurs underneath her breath. "Come on, Kharn, let's shut this bitch up."

Curiously, you...feel that strange warmth, again. In your hands. And the most peculiar buzzing at the back of your head, the sensation curiously like something drilling into your skull. Into your mind.

You ignore the strange phantom sensations for the time being. Whatever they were, they were probably nothing; either something brought about by your corruption, a harmless reminder of what ails you, or simply you reacting to half of the limiters of Malal's suit being disengaged. You've heard about the plethora of strange effects being near an activated Culexus could wreak upon the Magical Girl; you've probably experienced them all, in your career with Malal. This may simply be a new one, another to be added to the list.

No matter. It is uncomfortable, maybe unnerving, but it is nowhere near enough to get in the way of your murder-make.

It is with a laugh and a roar of Skulltaker being set to MAIM that you suddenly explode into movement, flinging yourself forward, moving the fastest you've ever moved. Crossing the distance between you and Ahriman in nearly a single bound, quickly enough that the word the Magical Girl is just about to spit at your direction has not yet been shaped by her lips.

Ahriman's midnight-black eyes barely has time to widen before you bring Skulltaker around in one sweeping horizontal slash, to finally end her brief career as Warmaster and start her new career as a part of your collection. The teeth whirring, faster than sight could follow, about to chew into the delicate flesh of her bared neck.

"No."

A flurry of red twintails entwined with rippling strips of prayer parchment, a blur of black, and Erebus - no longer wearing a white dress but a nun's black habit, the hood down, flickers into your sight in front of you, a split second before you feel the jarring impact of her serrated katana smashing right into your Skulltaker. The feverishly-chewing teeth sparking as they fail to bite into the sanctified steel. Surprisingly, unbelievingly...she actually manages to retard your progress, proving unmovable, her now-booted feet planted firmly on the carpeted floor. She is actually HOLDING you back.

"I am your opponent, Kharn." Erebus says, her voice clean, soft, clear. Her eyes burning with silent conviction. "If you're bent on getting your hands on Ahriman, then you'll have to kill me first."

You take a brief moment to consider her words, before you grin. It must have been a rather strange grin, for Erebus seems to falter the slightest bit as you do.

IT's strange. You just wanted to show how happy you were.

Happy that this will not be as easy as you thought.

Something of a challenge, this time.

How do you react?

Grinning wickedly, showing her your happiness, you darted your shame out and flicked it across that soul gem. The one on her chest that anyone could lick.

All the power drained out of Erebus as she shook in orgasmic bliss, shock displayed on her face. The katana fell from her grasp and she collapsed onto the floor, moaning lewdly.

"E-Erebus...? What did you do to her?!" Ahriman bellowed out at you, black lightening flaring around her staff.
"Merely surpassed you in giving her pleasure." You grinned at her. A note of hurt pride passed Ahriman's eyes...

You decide to cheat. A shame - you wanted to match swords with this promising young woman with the red fiery hair, to trade strike for strike, to see who is the better swordwielder in a fevered duel.

But as it is, you have little time to waste. You are wary of what Ahriman can do, despite the fact that she is talking strangely. Her eyes are the biggest warning you will ever get, you think. There is no time for games. At least, not now.

You allow your grin to go just a bit wider - before you allow your clawed right hand to unclench from Skulltaker, letting your left hand take the brunt of the stalemate. Erebus's eyes go wide as you then reach forward, directly into the two grinding blades between you - and she all but freezes as you close your fleshmetal fingers around her blade. Holding it fast, holding it tight.

"Fight me fairly, heretic," Erebus growls after a moment, and you merely allow yourself to grin as gleefully as you could. She grunts, trying to pull her sword away from your grip - but your claws have locked fast onto it. She cannot pull it out, unless you yourself wished it so. "Do not resort to such cowardly tricks!"

Cheating...well, it's not something you like to do, even though you will admit that it is always a good deal of fun when you do. Being blessed with hands and legs like yours, it is practically something that you are a natural at. Even without Skulltaker summoned in your hands, you have four bladed weapons at your disposal, each one of them able to reave clean in concrete and slice through armor. If it weren't for the fact that doing such antics actually hurt, well...you'd probably still go into combat with Skulltaker.

Because who doesn't like a two meter-long chainsaw, honestly?

Even more when you consider that you can actually turn it into a two meter-long maul with a press of an activation rune.

Then we stab and slice the bitch and slowly peel her face off.

Which you of course do, Skulltaker's teeth folding back into its chassis - just before you tear Erebus's pretty sword away from the deadlock. Just before you smash the entire length of your weapon right into her side.

Just before you see the offended glare of betrayal flash in your opponent's eyes, followed by them tearing up with hurt and rage.

Skulltaker's handle rattling gently in your grip allowing you to feel the delicious crunch of Erebus's ribs being pulverized. This lasts for but a moment, before the sheer force of it wrenches the young woman away from you in an explosive, wet crunching sound, hurling her now-broken form clean across the room. More sickening cracks follow as she slams right into the floor, so hard that the marble cracks underneath her. Blood pooling into the tiny fissures.

"Holy..." Malal breathes out in a vox-corrupted gasp. "...Kharn. What the fuck."

"EREBUS!" Ahriman screams, her voice hoarse, the ragged edge of insanity in her words. "EREBUS, NO--"

Hnh. You did not expect to hurt her THAT badly. You only wanted to put her away, temporarily, so you can attend to her Warmaster personally.

You make to turn away from her, a murmured apology on your lips - when a glint of steel in her hand makes you stop, just as a slight stinging sensation on your right hand makes you look back at Erebus.

Your hand is empty, and your claws bleeding. All five claws, with a deep furrow running across them. Bleeding black blood.

Her sword is in her hand. Gripped tightly with bloody fingers, an unintentional mirror to yours. She never let go of it, it seems like, even after the brief flight you've sent her on.

...Well. Perhaps there may be more to this Erebus than you thought.

This whole incident started when Murderface killed TWENTY ONE magical girls over a petty insult against Mami.
There is no reason to believe that Murderface would even hesitate to kill Ahriman if not for the fact that an instant kill would make this boss fight rather anticlimactic.

The powers depend on both the wish and the personality of the girl making. Homura got time powers due to her wish, in the form of a shield because she protects. Mami had ribbons, because although it wasn't her wish, her deepest desire was to have friends (ribbons=bonds). Sayaka has healing powers due to her wish, and is a swordswoman due to her desire of being a "hero of justice", etc...

You smile down at Erebus' broken form while you briefly shake your wounded right hand - the black blood splattering against the marble tile and hissing where droplets of it landed.

Even if your blow had not been a killing one, it was certainly of the debilitating sort - something you yourself know was enough to put a Magical Girl out of commission for a few months, by the minimum. Any lesser Magical Girl would have passed out from the crippling pain already, much less keep a grip on their weapon. Not only did Erebus keep her weapon, but also her consciousness, as she is looking up at you, hatred in her eyes, despite the mask of blood obscuring her face.

"Heretic," She manages to growl. "Traitor. Betrayer."

You shake your head at her, smiling. "Yes, yes, nice new titles for my business cards, I know of this. I will consider using them when this little affair is over." It's then that you turn back to the more pressing matter at hand - that being Ahriman herself. Erebus can certainly wait - it's not as if she's going anywhere. "Please be doing me a favor, Erebus? Stay down until I kill your Warmaster. We will finish our own duel later."

Cackling - Skulltaker once more roaring in your hand - it's then that turn towards Ahriman. The Third Warmaster. Her retinue either dead, dying or both around her, leaving her alone. Ripe for the picking, as they say. With only her warp-cursed eyes and that golden hequin staff in her hands to help her.

With Malal falling in lockstep beside you, both of you move toward her. Not running, but not walking, either. Stalking. Moving in for the kill.

"T-the...The Blessed Lady protects." Ahriman stutters after a moment, her black eyes flickering in hesitation, before repeating the phrase with conviction. Her voice going louder as zeal slowly smoothens her face, fanaticism making her pale cheeks glow and redden. One of her hands relinquishes its grip on the staff to point toward you, black lightning gathering in front of her outstretched finger. "The Blessed Lady protects--"

"To the abyss with your Blessed Lady," Malal snarls from the vox speakers of her helm - before the amber lines on her suit pulse, once, and she breaks into a sprint, the orange light now suffusing her. You start running just as she passes you - keeping in step just behind her - and it's with the overpowering smell of burning carrion and ozone that Ahriman sends her first ruinous spell at the both of you.

Of all things, she opens with a spell that nearly blasts the entire floor to kingdom come.

It is, in all respects, a bolt of searing, vaporizing light. The light nearly blinding white at its core, yet blacker than the blackest black at the edges. Perhaps it was simply the bolt itself being so bright that it turned everything dark - or that it seemed to somehow leech all other surrounding light around it. Whatever it was, you felt just how powerful it was, the moment it smashed into Malal's barrier. The moment it collided, head-on, with the field of unspace kept bounded to your aide's sphere of influence.

It's odd that QB would bother to warn people that magical girls become witches because that discovery is a great way to cause it to happen and collect energy to fight entropy.
Which brings up the question again: Why bother setting up this huge officio and rent out magical girls to mundane people for cash? That doesn't fight entropy.

That said, the difference between anime Mami and MGNQ Mami are pretty easy to chalk up as Mami growing, maturing, and having come to terms with the horrible secret of space, er, I mean Megucas.

The side effect of Mami now realizing that she's good at wrapping people around her finger and trying not to abuse it is a pretty interesting bit of growth.

The concussive force of the impact is akin to getting hit by a tank, thrown by a very angry Magical Girl. Even though you do not take the brunt of it - you are taking cover behind Malal, after all - you feel it even then, the sledgehammer blow rocking your aide but not unbalancing her. She does not even flinch in mid-step.

Unable to detonate, the bolt sparks as it grinds against Malal's barrier - before careening off to the side, where it smashes into a wall. The wall takes a moment to lose all of its color, and for a second you swore you saw daemonic faces snarl from the wallpaper - right before it EXPLODES, in a disproportionate display of incendiary force. Revealing the blue sky and part of the city's skyline to this little get-together, as well as a rather large drop to ground level.

Ahriman lets out a cry of frustration, of rage, of sheer hatred, and it's then that she sends another bolt crashing against your aide's barrier. And another. And another. Malal, of course, is more than willing to meet her halfway - that is, she now smashes her barrier right into the oncoming projectiles, gesturing with both her hands to extend the amber light outwards, to choke and muffle the bolts being spat out by the Third Warmaster. Each blocked hit bringing the both of you closer to Ahriman, until you're well within charging range.

"Any time you're ready, Kharn." Malal says, her voice smooth and unbroken, despite the vox-corruption.

Erebus going Witch would be a complication, but not a serious one. Ahriman is still the greater threat because without Malal's anti-magic field, we'd be instantly dead. And it doesn't prevent Ahriman from using magic to bring the building down on us, Malal's powers or no.

A Witch, in comparison, is a straightforward and relatively easier target.

Or, in this universe, he and his fellow Incubators might not be concerned with stopping the end of the universe. Instead, they might be playing this thing as a huge game, like a browser-based game. See who can get the highest score, the most controlled territory.

Perhaps in addition to gathering energy to combat entropy (or whatever reasons they have for collecting emotional/psychic energy), they also want to extend their sphere of influence on planet Earth. Thus, it may be in their best interests to maintain a force of Megucas in order to hold territory and expand it, when necessary.

This whole turf war thing may be just to keep up appearances, amuse themselves, or merely a socially acceptable way for Incubators to ply their politics.

We could present evidence of the conspiracy the Warmaster was planning. That she was making some kind of power play that targeted one of our Puella Magi -- and that after her ambush/betrayal on the fake mission failed, she pulled the 100-puella sacrifice bullshit thing.

So... The 3rd Incubator is down ~120 Puella, including a Warmaster and the badass Erebus, but he's not completely out of the game.

Plus, it DOES mean that a Warmaster who was marching to her own tune, was removed from the post.

And he probably doesn't just have everyone tie their soul gem to one person because maybe you can't do more than two, and casually giving someone who may go crazy and/or die to one person in the Officio would be beyond retarded.

Kharn finished this tale and then concludes with "... so you missed the whole fight (it was totally awesome, by the way! Oh man, you should've seen it...) and when you woke up you had amnesia."

"... Kharn. Did my bouts of amnesia happen to coincide with our missions going FUBAR and me getting caught in explosions?"

"Huh, well, now that you mention it..."

And thus the mystery of Murderface's periodic bouts of amnesia is explained!

Anyway. If there's one thing that Chiaki is going to take away as a lesson from this...

... is that she fits right in as a Warmaster.

I mean, Totally Awesome Sweet Alabama Liquid Snake, for god's sake! Just the NAME by itself makes Chiaki's appointment to Warmaster look normal and sane!

The fact that it sounds like Totally Awesome Sweet Alabama Liquid Snake loves explosives as much as Chiaki does -- and WITHOUT the benefit of a timestop to let you run clear of ground zero! -- is just icing on the cake.

Midori is essentially a stranger and a turncoat but people could warm up to her in a short time, or loath her because we actively chose to let her tag along with us (how would they react if they found out she is green green and has pretty much paired herself with murderface for her manga?)

No, no I don`t. Deculture actually offered us enough Options and opportunites to approach every single on of them.

For Kirika we should have kidnapped Oriko and used their relationship to get closer to Kirika and kill her.

For the Black Dude we just should have blown his ass into orbit as soon as we figured out that he had a golden weapon.

And for Wakaba instead of trying to talk to her we should have sniped her Soulgem from a distance.

There where always other options but we always choose the one that got others involved and inevitably hurt instead of.. you know.. trying to do deal with our shit on our own.

It`s not about being Emo as much as having enough brain to figur out that so far whenever someone was involved with our stuff he brushed death.

Sayaka TIPPED KIRIKA OFF. When Mami spilled the beans to Sayaka, it was her idea to warn Kirika. I am also half-convinced that Sayaka knew that Kirika wouldn’t run (which Mami thought Kirika would do) and would instead take the opportunity to counter-ambush us.

Remember that Kirika BLINDED Kyoko. How do you think Sayaka feels about that? And yet you think Sayaka would care about Kirika getting retired? You think she suggested tipping off Kirika out of concern for her life?

Worst case scenario, she was pissed because we dodged a bullet by setting the trap off early and didn’t die. She was upset we “didn’t do our damn job” because she hoped we’d have predictably walked into our death.

And she probably blamed herself for Mami getting kidnapped -- but quickly unloaded that unto us. “Murderface should have just followed the plan and gotten killed by Kirika.”

Perhaps that's another reason to get Kyoko/Sayaka into Warmaster Matsuda's cabinet/circle of advisors. Keeping Sayaka well into the officio's public eye may serve to blunt any blatant attempts at sabotage as well, due to her naturally unsubtle way of dealing with things.

I am aware that it is inevitable.

It doesn´t change the fact that most of our fuck ups could have been prevented with some planning ahead instead of rushing in. The only time we actually did come up with a plan was with Kirika and only because Deculture pretty much came up with that himself and people just rolled with it.

Which could have been avoided all in all if we offed her like we should have done in the first place, instead of talking to her.

Same for Mirai. One or two people sane people who suggested snipping the bitch out of the surrounding woods got outvoted by horde of chucklefucks who think that it is a good idea to talk to someone in a clearing that full of maneating killerbears.

You said its all about minmizing casulties, I COMPLETLY agree, but right now, we aren`t anywhere near minimalizing anything.

And this is why Chiaki is a walking disaster and this is exactly why for the nest few assignments we probably should try to figure out shit on our own.

Wow. Really? I don't remember reading that, so I'm basically just running off of what I DO remember of Sayaka.

Like that time she literally tried to backstab us. In the first thread. When we went to Mami's. And then bitched at us and blamed us for not having gotten to Mami's faster.

Shit, you were here yourself, why didn't you do a better job?

I suppose it's possible that Sayaka did not see who/what she was lunging at when she did that... I am not entirely sure myself.

Still, her actions immediately afterwards did not endear her to me.

And then there was the Kirika business where Sayaka fucked things up for us, blamed us, and if I remember correctly, Sayaka never spoke about the whole "sold you out to Kirika" thing. She just kept quiet about it.

In my eyes, Chiaki has had saintly patience towards Sayaka. Because the first impression she has of Sayaka (due to the new amnesia thing)? Backstab. Plus blaming.

Then the Kirika shit. Plus blaming us some more. She should be thankful that Chiaki managed to control herself and get out of the bloodrage...

And did Sayaka keep quiet about our near-berserkergang? No.

Yet we kept quiet about the "Bluebird" Kirika mentioned.

Face it, Sayaka's kindof a bitch.

Though we do want to keep Chiaki's friends from dying, that's like not using a whole lot of guns because you don't want to use the ammo for it. We may also not have a choice in some situations, and what you propose also ignores the fact that some of our allies may WANT to help us out even knowing the shit that we get ourselves into.

They're magical girls. The danger they face comes with the territory. If they didn't want to do all this shit, they'd just retire or go do some of the desk jobs that the other nameless magical girls do.

Coming up with well-planned tactics and such is a good idea, though.

Of course not. You keep looking back at past missions and going 'WE COULD HAVE DONE SO MUCH BETTER.' Well no shit. If we had the information we do now I could plan out a goddamn op with no one dying. But we didn't have that info. And most of those missions were reaction based. This happens, do something about it, and we did with what info we had at that time.

Did Deculture come up with that plan? I don't really remember. I thought that from the beginning there was a basic "go snipe her" plan, and that later it got changed to "Confront Kirika ourselves; have Misaka ready to snipe. Have Sayaka guarding Misaka, because we know Kirika now knows about sniping."

It was a pretty simple plan.

>Which could have been avoided all in all if we offed her like we should have done in the first place, instead of talking to her.

We would have gone in blind, while Kirika was expecting us. She either would have been able to get away, or she would have been able to close in on us in melee and then we would have had to face her SOLO.

This WAS a matter of luck, yeah. But strictly speaking "Should have just faced Kirika like we'd planned to" was probably not the best outcome.

She encouraged Iori to develop a crush on Matsuda as she thought it would help humanize Matsuda. We all know how well this went.

Midori must be handled very carefully. She showed that she was willing to put down a former friend for Chiaki's sake, which shows that she's loyal to her; however, we do not know if this loyalty stems from a huge crush on Murderface combined with obsession. It would behoove Matsuda to acknowledge that she really put herself on the line for us and that she has feelings for us, at the very least. If Matsuda needs the one-month cleansing option for the corruption, it might be either a really horrible idea or a really great idea to ask Midori to take that month of downtime and do some hardcore introspection/self-reflection (in addition to combat/illusion power training). You know, the type of stuff that bares open a person's soul and creates epiphanies.

If she still feels deeply for Matsuda, then OH SHIT HOW DID THIS GET HERE CHIAKI IS NOT GOOD AT RELATIONS.

She also shows grace under pressure and a willingness to swallow her pride and get used to being a subordinate. This may mean that she has the potential to become a very competent ally.

I think Sayaka hates Matsuda for two reasons. One is jealousy that Mami spends so time trying to fix Matsuda

Well there is two ways we could deal with Midori.

1. Is ask her to do some soul searching/reflection. Which I think is the safer option
2. We could try to be cruel-to-be-kind as ask her to define when she fell in love with us.
"Did you fall in love with me when:
a)You first drew Murder Mayumi?"
b)When I shot your legs out?"
c)When I spared your life?"
I think its c)

She already had a girlboner/fantasy about us when she was a distant fangirl drawing porn of us.
Then we treated her like an human being and gave her a drunken orgasm instead of torturing her.
Then we saved her life. Not only that, we even actually gave her a better life.

Hasn't been explored, but I think two options are probable:

1) The gem expends an insane amount of magical energy to regenerate the body and the resuscitated MG needs grief seeds immediately or

2) The Soulgem shuts down after a while since it's not getting any sensory information from the body.

If we're going to talk about plans and stuff, we may as well talk about how to stop being a drug-addled alcoholic as Chiaki.

I think our first step should be gaining a best friend that isn't whiskey. Mami has already acted as a guardian and an almost motherly figure to us since she found us in the witch's barrier. Instead of drinking away our problems we should maybe talk about them with somebody.

If Mami doesn't pan out, or we just don't want to go there, we can always go with Midori. Even if we don't want her to be our waifu, we can still put her in the Meguca equivalent of the friend-zone. She's already stated that she's willing to put up with all of our shit, so if we didn't want to put that on Mami we could always have Midori try and help us out.
And when I say that, I mean in the more "You are my first friend ever." kind of way. Sure Chiaki can get along with people, but she has a hard time forming deeper connections with them. And Midori along with Mami are a bit more enthusiastic to look past all of our inadequacies than most.

"Do not rush a lady, Malal," You chide your aide as another screaming bolt of destruction crashes against her barrier, only to bounce back and corrode a ragged wound into the concrete yet again. "Besides, you look like you need the exercise, eh? Getting a bit soft around the middle, what, you eat too much ice cream?"

"Just take her skull already, Kharn, okay?" Another bolt hits, and this time, your aide nearly slams back into you. "...Ouch. Christ this bitch has issues. Kharn, you alright--?" Your helmeted aide starts to ask, but you have little time to listen as it is - your grin coming to the fore once more, as you see Ahriman suddenly fall onto her knees, the staff thudding heavily into the ground as the Third Warmaster painfully coughs up evil-smelling blood. You hear Malal also fall to the ground, showing her fatigue clearly as the Third Warmaster does, but her cry eggs you on.

"FUCK HER UP, KHARN!"

You take your chance. This is it. Skulltaker roaring in your hands, you raise it above your head as you lunge forward - the two rows of chainteeth chewing air in complete concert. This is the mercy stroke, as far as you're concerned, even when Ahriman herself does not deserve any. Her head will roll free, and her skull will be yours.

Unfortunately, your third attempt to decapitate the Third Warmaster goes just as well as the previous two. Thwarted by none other than an increasingly annoying girl with twintails, and strips of parchment braided through her crimson hair.

Only this time, she'd all but tackled you, out of nowhere. From the side, now that you've time to figure out just what happened. Her nun's habit slick and fragrant with her own blood.

"In Ahriman's name, Kharn," She hisses at your stunned expression, a cheerful grin splitting her bloody lips.

There is a moment of painfully serene silence before the both of you start falling.

From fifty stories up.

And suddenly, you are aware of your tongue.

Sometimes these things just happen to you, somehow.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/30/12(Sun)10:59 No.20930586

One and a half years ago, you were a Magical Girl.

And dying in combat was something that you actually looked forward to.

It wasn't that you were suicidal, or led a fatalistic existence. You enjoyed life and everything it had to offer, including more than your fair share of young and willing blonde-haired women. You enjoyed the ocassional sip of liquor, you adored indulging your sweet tooth...you were not exactly eager to settle down and buy the farm, that's what you're getting at. But at the same time, it wasn't something you dreaded, either. Like everything else, you always met the possibility of dying with an eager smile and open arms.

Just so long as it was during something exciting and cool. Something your father would be proud to read from your tombstone.

Like dying from a full-out swordfight in midair, while both you and your opponent are free-falling from fifty stories up.

Fortunately, this is one of those times.

Unfortunately for your opponent, you being eager to die in this situation does not mean that you will hand over your life so easily.

She will have to do her best to kill you. She will have to do her best to tear you apart.

Because if there is something you learned from your father, it is not to be dildos at fighting.

You are Valnikov Kharn, Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. You will be the first to admit that you enjoy killing things. You enjoy it enough that you had a kill-counter installed in your aide's Anima Speculum helmet, to keep track of each and every life you end and have them added to an ongoing tally.

You had it removed after a few weeks, mainly because the counter seemed to always lag behind your own mental tally by a few dozen points or so. It came to a point that you would get into shouting matches with Malal about the correct kill count, and drove the two of you apart whenever it came up. It was also at that point that you earned the entire ire of the Culexus, and for four days they followed you wherever you went. Silently judging. Silently staring.

When they started watching you in the bathroom you begged Malal for forgiveness, and bought tickets to her favorite Death Metal band's concert to...grease the wheels of reconciliation, as they say. Things worked themselves out after that, with your aide sending an entire squad of newly-minted blonde Eversors to your office for some "hands-on training with the Warmaster" a few days after. You still have the photos from that night, kept in a secret album in your smartphone. You flick through it every so often, especially when you are spending the night alone.

Well, that is that and this is this. It is strange for you to be thinking about blondes at this particular point in time. What with falling from a fatal height and everything, the wind rushing in your ears, with a grinning redhead clamping her arms around your waist. Trying to take you down with her in a suicidal dive.

"End of the line, Kharn," Erebus snarls as the SANY building's reflective windowpanes flash past you, each one giving you a split-second glance at how ridiculous two Magical Girls are in the middle of free-fall.

It'll be a few moments until you find yourself in a rather abrupt reunion with the ground, so you'll have to be quick. No more Warmastering if you end up a greasy red stain on the ground.

"Right, this is getting annoying, yes?" You shout at the redhead above the roar of the wind as the both of you continue to fall like...well, like Magical Girl-shaped rocks. "I thought that it would be fun, you know, maybe to try a new color, but honestly this is starting to get irritating!" Erebus blinks at you, clearly puzzled and having no idea what you're talking about. "Is not you, really. It is me! Well, me and Malal, I do not think she would approve of our love! It is forbidden!"

"What in the world are you babbling about--" She starts, her eyes narrowing - before you drown her out with the awful, awful screeching of five clawed fingers being dragged down smooth, polished plexiglass, creating ugly furrows in the perfect surface. The sound is loud enough and shrill enough to make your own teeth itch, but at the very least, it's working to slow your fall from a plummeting dive to a controlled descent.

The moment that your fall is slowed down enough that you're not seeing your life flash past your eyes - your claws finally having dug deeply enough to hook against a solid metal windowframe - it's then that you plant both bladed feet agains the pane of glass below you and push off quickly. Giving you just enough momentum to swing out - not an easy feat when you've a rogue Magical Girl around your waist - and then swing back in. Snapping out with both legs, gritting your teeth and closing your eyes as you smash your way back into the building's interior.

You land on carpeted floor in a careful roll - dusting off the bits of shattered glass from your coat in the process - and as you all but fling Erebus away from you as you come to a stop, uncoiling and rising to your feet as you do so.

The Third Warmaster's equerry, despite her obvious injuries and the clean, pure stench of heartsblood trickling from her wounds, manages to land on both feet, serrated katana held in an admirably steady grip. Her purity seals, twined in her hair, is also sporting crimson smudges - making her look like she'd just been giving the freshly-dead their last rites. A priestess in a war zone.

You give your surroundings a quick glance. It is a typical office floor, with gray cubicles, gray carpeting, garish fluorescent lighting. Where salarymen and salarywomen eked out a living doing pointless data entry work, spending day in and day out squinting at monitor screens. You can almost taste the despair hanging over the entire place.

Maybe you have just discovered why some Incubators, including Kyuubey, had opted for such an approach to their Officio? You will have to ask Malal about it, sometime.

Right now, you have to kill a Magical Girl who is stubbornly refusing to die.

Erebus must have seen the look in your eyes, now, for she seems to nod imperceptibly at this. She spits a glob of crimson to the side, murmuring something underneath her breath, before raising her sword's hilt up to her face, at eye level, in a salute. Ceremonially kissing the sword guard.

"My name is Erebus. I was once Izumi Kanako." The crimson-haired girl says in a clear, pure voice. "Eversor Rank. Equerry and Aide to the Warmaster of the Third Incubator. Sworn to one Warmaster, Chosen of the Blessed Lady."

That implies that she is more loyal to her Warmaster than to her Incubator.
No matter how eccentric the Third might be, I can't see an Incubator accepting being supplanted like that.
Nor would other Incubators; it sets a bad precedent, and they would be concerned with loyalty within their own Officios.
Just for that, they might decide to wipe out the Third.

Despite yourself, you cannot help but smile. Infuriating as she was, you still find her endearing.

You will feel bad when you kill her, you think.

Clearing your throat, you raise the inactive hulk of Skulltaker in a similar salute. "And I am Kharn. I was once Valnikov Katerina." You say this as your smile widens by the tiniest bit. "Eversor Rank. Warmaster of the Ninth Incubator. Heretic. Traitor. Betrayer."

You place a soft kiss on Skulltaker's sword guard, in mimicry and in respect.

"And I will be making a trophy of your skull. I believe you deserve it."

The silence between you stretches out to an almost comfortable silence as you both slowly lower your weapons.

And it is then that you lunge at each other, at the same time. Her katana crackling with small, jagged forks of electricity. Your chainsword, Skulltaker, roaring in your hands as its chainteeth angrily chew air.

Injured, bleeding, and clearly fatigued, Erebus will not be much of a challenge. You are aware of this, just as she is. Her death is in the air, and she is living in moments.

At the very least, you can give her a death someone like her deserves.

It ends in one stroke. Just one. A perfect cut that slices past Erebus' guard, shearing through her katana, her hands, and her waist. The twin rows of Skulltaker's chainteeth ripping through tempered steel, skin, flesh and bone with murderous ease. Messily painting the gray wall behind her a lumpy, dotted crimson. Her broken sword clattering to the floor at the same time as her individual pieces fall - heavy wet squelches punctuated by the dull thud of forged steel.

She dies like her comrades, slaughtered in battle. But she, at least, died fighting.

You let your chainsword idle into a rumbling murmur as you stand amongst the slowly-dying remains of Erebus. Her hands chopped off at the wrists, bloody stumps that will no longer hold a weapon in offense, she looks up at you with uncertain, unseeing eyes. Her breaths getting shallower, getting slower. Seemingly unrealizing that you'd severed everything past her waist, and her lower body resting a few feet away from her.

"Ah...Ahriman? Ahriman, are...are you there?" She says after a moment, her face pale. The blood loss will be taking her any moment, now. "A-Ahriman, I don't...I don't see the Blessed Lady. She...she's not coming. Ahriman, i-it's dark. I'm scared..."

Maybe the Silent Room prevents witch-outs? It kills all magic.
The only problem is that the lack of magic would mean the lack of regeneration, so they'd have to bring prisoners out to heal and then send them back in for more torture.

As much as you would like to give Erebus her last rites and make her journey to the hereafter one she does not have to undertake alone, you unfortunately do not have time on your side. You can only end her suffering as quickly as you can, instead of lwaiting for her grievous wounds and blood loss to do the job. With the tip of Skulltaker, you pull her Soul Gem - a nice bright crimson one, ovoid in shape, with a seed of darkness blossoming from within - from the throat of her habit's collar and onto the ground beside her.

"Ahriman?" She murmur, again, weakly this time. "Ahriman, please don't let me die alone--"

"You are not alone, child." You say, just as you rest the edge of your bladed foot on the gem itself. "You deserve better than this, but I cannot give it. At the very least, rest with the knowledge that Ahriman will be joining you soon."

Silence, before a sigh. "...Thank you." You barely hear Erebus whisper, the light in her eyes dimming as she breathes out the last words.

You press down on the Soul Gem. A spark of light, a brittle cracking sound - and what was once The Third Warmaster's Equerry now lay shattered underneath your bladed foot, crunched into pretty dust. Another life, extinguished, dead because of this irresponsible foolishness. Adding another death to Ahriman's rising pile of sins.

You make to take her skull, but you take one of her purity seals, instead. The parchment sticky with the girl's own blood. It is not a trophy for you, not like how skulls would be. You will use it as proof, as testament. To show Ahriman just what her folly had done. Perhaps this will make her see the situation a bit more clearly.

No one should be allowed to die without being reminded of their mistakes.

You make your way back to the ruined fiftieth floor, courtesy of an elevator that thankfully is still in working order. As the doors finally slide open, you are treated once more to the charnel house that you've made of the Third Warmaster's social room - but this time it is all but a blasted, ruined battlefield, charred and blackened and torn apart by wild, uncontrollable magic.

The walls and ceiling all but sheared away, exposing the once-grand floor to the garish afternoon sun. In the center of it is Malal, standing beside the unconscious form of Murderface - both hands held out as she projects a field of flickering amber, protecting herself and your subordinate from migraine-bright lances of destructive force being launched by Ahriman herself.

...At least you think the thing swooping, cackling overhead, borne aloft by large, swooping raven wings is Ahriman. Once coldly regal and beautiful, elegantly so - the Third Warmaster seems to have been twisted into something the complete opposite of her. Her once beautiful face turned into what looks like a permanent scowl, a network of crimson and black veins seemingly branching out from her sunless eyes like permanent tracks of tarry tears.

Her elaborate torn to shreds at the back by the two giant, feathery projections that now seemed to hold her in midair despite not even flapping, or even moving.

Her once beautiful hands now twisted into arthritic claws, with her right seemingly curled permanently around the golden hequin staff with the hissing snake head. It seems to be the only thing left unchanged on the Third Warmaster as she continued to pummel your aide's faltering barrier with brutal blasts of raw, searing energy. The very building underneath your feet shaking with each concussive impact.

Something has turned the Third Warmaster into a monster. Your immediate guess is that she had somehow Witched out, but this is different. This is not despair given form, hopelessness manifested into reality. This is something else - something much, much worse.

Gotta take the heat of Malal and our new apprentice. I wonder if this transformation is due to Pinky's golden toy or if Ahriman somehow knows Erebus is dead already.

"Kharn...Kharn, if you're still alive..." You hear your aide cough wetly from inside her helm as a particularly nasty-looking blast of raw magic smashes into her shield, forcing her down into one knee. "Kharn, I know one measly fifty-story drop isn't ever enough to kill you, s-so if you're reading me, I'm just about done keeping this crazy bitch from getting bored...!" Another blast, and the amber barrier flickers again. Another blast and it would collapse. "...KHARN! KHARN, WHERE THE HELL ARE YOU--"

"So impatient. Please, do not shout." You fail to stifle a snigger before you chide your seemingly panicking aide. You lope out of cover, your bladed feet easily carrying you out into the open in sparking, gently-clanking sides. "Kharn is here to save the day, once again! Hnn, and I have always thought it would be other way around."

"Kharn!" There is nothing but frank relief from your aide's voice. Relief that is quickly turned into irritated indignation. "What were you waiting for, a signed invitation? What took you so long?"

You tell her that it's a long story, one you may be willing to talk about when all three of you are not vaporized yet. Malal is about to reply when a deafening shriek cuts into your conversation, along with the flapping of giant wings.

"HERETIC!" The monster that was once known as Warmaster Ahriman caws at you, the insult given physical form in the guise of a wall of forceful air, nearly pushing you back. Ahriman's voice has been twisted as well, the daemonic voice that had earlier interlaced hers now coming to the fore, overpowering her own. "WHY DO YOU NOT SIMPLY LAY DOWN AND DIE, BLASPHEMER? OR DO YOU SIMPLY CRAVE DEATH BY OUR APOTHEOSIS SO MUCH? THE BLESSED LADY--"

"Your Blessed Lady can go get stuffed, I think!" You shout, cutting her tirade short - just as you rear up and toss

Erebus' wadded-up purity seal at her. Instead of avoiding what first looks like some sort of half-assed projectile, Ahriman seems to catch it - by merely glancing at it and stopping it in mid-flight. The folded, blood-soaked parchment unfolding to reveal its true nature.

There is silence as the monster's sunless eyes go wide.

"T-this...this is...Erebus..." The monster reaches out with one palsied hand, trembling as it reaches out towards the desecrated object. "What have you done with her...? Kharn, did you...?"

You signal to your own aide to get Murderface someplace safe the moment you say so, before turning back to the monstrous, airborne form of Ahriman. "She took a long time to die, I was just about to say!" You grin at her, enjoying the sheer audacity of this moment, knowing full well that the wrong - or right - word can send this crazed Warmaster into an atomizing spree. That said, you're not even sure if she's a Magical Girl anymore, at that. "She was amazing! She fought like a tiger, even when grievously injured! It is only a shame that she had to die because of your mistakes!"

The creature that was once Ahriman flinches at this, as if physically slapped. "N-no, no, this cannot be. The Blessed Lady promised me that she would be kept safe...safe from you! Safe from harm! I only needed to sacrifice what was necessary, a-and she would take care of the rest...I did not forsee this!"

Ahriman slowly floats back down to the ground of the ruined social room, the massive wings sprouting from her back flapping in a mournful downbeat as her bare feet touch tile once more. Tears of crimson dripping down her cheeks as she held the ruined purity seal to her chest with one hand, the other still gripping the staff as if her life depended on it.

"S-she...she promised...the Blessed Lady promised...!" It's then that Ahriman wails, clearly not taking Erebus's demise at your hands well. For a moment, you wonder if you will be as maudlin, when you find Malal's corpse somewhere. Dying without you.

"Kharn, you...you have to get that staff away from her," Malal manages to say in between spasming coughs and gasping for air. "I think it's the one that's turned her...i-into that thing. Get rid of it, destroy it, I don't care. That thing's evil."

Is she sure? Well, of course it is gold, and gold weaponry always has that air of menace about them. But surely such gaudy ornamentation is not the source of the sudden corruption?

"Hello, Culexus here." Malal snorts. "I can check for disturbing magic signatures, at least, and that thing...that thing's not right. Get it away from her, Kharn, and she'll be right again." She shrugs the singed shoulders of her costume. "Or it just gives you an opening to kill her. Whichever comes first, really."

"I...I sacrificed everything, j-just to keep her safe, but in the end, I..." The thing that had once been a beautiful, powerful Warmaster is now sobbing tears of blood, crying into a clawed hand. Her other still twisted around the golden Hequin staff that seemed to get brighter with every passing moment. "Erebus, please, forgive me--"

You decide to take this chance. The time for words is done. Nodding at your aide - who staggers to her feet, throwing Murderface's unconscious form over her shoulders in a firearm carry - you cover her escape by placing yourself between her and Ahriman, just as you gun Skulltake from KILL to BURN. The whirring, roaring chainblade sparking once, twice, before finally catching crimson fire.

Ahriman would have made a great Magical Girl. Given time, she would have become a legend of her own right.

But this proves that she can never become Warmaster, can never grow into the title she'd pulled out of a brutal honor duel victory. She can never lead.

With an invective in your harsh native language at your lips, you launch yourself at Ahriman, your metallic feet sparking as they tear you across the ripped carpet and revealed tile. Your entire body shifting into the blow, a horizontal strike to shear the monstrosity's head off her shoulders. To add to your collection of skulls, of gruesome remembrances of those whose threads you've cut.

This is the fourth time you're attempting this. The fourth, as you've learned in Japan, can be quite unlucky, and could spell your demise if you're not careful.

The roaring, burning blade stops only mere inches away from Ahriman's smooth, milky neck, captured by some invisible force. YOu blink at this, before pushing on your weapon, intent on letting it do its messy work. The chainteeth sparking as they glow red-hot from the flames.

"...No," Is all that Ahriman murmurs, as she turns slightly to consider the blade of Skulltaker mere inches away from her skin. She casts it a cold, piercing look, before swiveling that gaze towards you. "No, not you, Kharn. Two...two other beings beside you. Still here, still alive. Hiding. Two pieces of a broken soul? Curious. Both...both bearing the Blessed Lady's promise."

More nonsense. More babbling. Whatever the golden staff was or wherever it was form, it had certainly done its purpose - to drive its wearer insane, and twist them into gruesome, misshapen beings. Ahriman was beyond help, that was much was clear. All the more to part her head from her shoulders--

"Kindly stop that, please."

It's with but the smallest, almost contemptuous gesture that Ahriman shatters Skulltaker into pieces. The blade coming apart, sundered down to its base components - gears, chainteeth, loosened shards of metal flying about as your pride and joy is destroyed in a single heartbeat.

She then nods towards you - and you barely have time to react before some of the bigger, sharper shards are suddenly sent spearing towards you, punching right through you with all the force of an expertly-wielded jackhammer. Three of them, in fact, sheathe themselves into your midsection, all at the ame time, the combined force of them taking the wind out of your lungs just as they send you crashing on your back. Pinning you to the floor as you gasp for air. the hot lancing pain preventing you from taking too deep a breath, or even move.

"Stay here, Kharn, while I see what's so interesting about your two friends." Ahriman murmurs, the crumpled purity seal falling from her hands and onto the floor. "They've become suddenly fascinating."

Dimly, through the haze of pain, you could hear her step around you, her footsteps sticky and wet from where she's stepping on the puddle of blood forming around you. Your own blood.

At the edge of your fading hearing, you can hear Malal screaming your name for help. Punctuated by the sound of gunfire.

And a young woman whispering lovingly in your ears.

"Kharn, this...this does not need to end here. Let me help you. Please. Let me help you."

How do you respond?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/02/12(Tue)11:59 No.20959658

And this is one of the few times you've come so close to dying.

It's shameful, how you look like right now. No longer the smiling, midnight-eyed legend with the terrible claws, you have been reduced to nothing more than a terrified young woman from the Urals, choking on your own blood as it fills your lungs, her mouth. Drowning on your own offering to the crimson god upon his skull throne, even as it pools around you in a gory, pulpy corona.

This is not how Magical Girls should die. This is not how Warmasters should die.

This is a death reserved for cowards. For betrayers.

You idly wonder, then, if you are either of the two.

It would not be the first time you considered yourself as either.

"KHARN! KHARN, GET UP! GET UP, YOU WORTHLESS SNOW SHOVELING YOKEL! WALK IT OFF! THAT'S JUST A FLESH WOUND!"

No. No, you're not exactly gasping for breath.

You're laughing.

Misting blood with every half-drowned cough of amusement, of bitter hilarity.
Laughing despite the jagged shards of shattered metal pinning you to the concrete, jutting out from the ruined flesh of your stomach. Laughing despite hearing the muffled cries of your aide screaming your name amidst high-caliber fire.

"KHARN!"

Laughing despite the half-heard whispers of a malevolent goddess in your ears.

It's not that you find your current situation funny, no.

You just find it hilarious that you've been done in such a way that would make even your saintly mother roll in her grave.

Ahriman killed you with your own weapon. She gutted you with your own chainblade, or at least the parts of it that actually could hurt.

She murdered you with the ruins of Skulltaker.

It's with this thought that you spend the dwindling moments of your remaining consciousness hacking up blood in bitter, scathing amusement.

So ends the legend of Valnikov Kharn, The Ninth Warmaster.

So ends your career filled with blood, blondes, and bones of faces.

Well, you had a good run. No one would begrudge you of that, at least.

"Miss Kharn, please." The pink-haired girl from earlier, with the same eyes as yours, with the same eyes as Ahriman's - peeks from the corner of your already dimming vision. "Let me help you. It doesn't have to end this way. It doesn't have to end so soon. Let me give you the warrior's death you deserve, Kharn. Not like this. Not on your back like some...dog."

Blood burbling from your mouth as you chuckle at your promises, you reach downward with your trembling claws - and take hold of Skulltaker's shards embedding you into the concrete. A brief tug, and the nauseating, electrifying stab of white-hot pain flares anew as you pull them out in one single movement, doing even more damage than they did going in.

You manage to pull yourself up to your feet - somehow caught with the strangest compulsion to stand, when you could have simply just waited for the darkness to come - just as you see Ahriman sending a bolt of pure malevolent force smashing into Malal. The spell punching through her shields like a bullet through glass. Sending your aide flying back, the front of her suit sizzling, smoking. A sickening crack that bespoke of broken bones splitting the air along with her vox-corrupted scream.

You blink once, and you see Ahriman wave a hand towards Malal - and the limp, lifeless body of your best friend floats upwards, animated by some unseen force, hovering closer to the Third Warmaster. She gestures with that hand, and Malal's right arm rips itself from her shoulder in one loud, juicy crunch.

This jerks your most trusted companion back from unconsciousness, and she screams a ragged scream of torment and pain. Her entire body spasming, she reaches out towards Ahriman's throat with her remaining hand - before that is torn away too, with the same wet twisting. The same muffled snapping.

"Vengeance, Kharn." The pink-haired girl says, sweetly. Lovingly. "Righteous revenge. Taste...no, savor that word."

She holds out her gloved hand towards you, the loveliest smile you've ever seen on her face. Almost by instinct, you reach out toward it.

It just really depends if Kharn is desperate enough to accept help from a likely betrayer, or has enough pride/principals/integrity/reasons/whatever/(insert word here) to refuse such aid even if it means the death of her closest friend and herself.

>Captcha: mean peptimi

Even then, is it a good idea to trust a hallucination or callidus?

And ignoring all that, Kharn should at least be able to recognize that some random person showing up out of nowhere promising power is probably a least a little untrustworthy. Faustian bargains tend to backfire spectacularly.

Weighing options from Kharn's perspective:

On one hand, Ahriman is absurdly powerful right now and will likely tear through us and our friends with nary a glance to see if their bodies still twitched. If things get desperate enough, Malal may switch off the helmet inhibitor and give Ahriman a full blast of raw Culexus, but at the cost of most of her lifespan. Accepting the hand and promise from this pink girl will promise revenge on Ahriman for sure.

On the other hand, if this is the Blessed Lady that Ahriman and Erebus were babbling on about, she was not against slaughtering hundreds of MGs for her own purposes, and twisted Ahriman into an unrecognizeable parody of her former self. There's no telling what Kharn could do if she accepted that power, though she did will herself back from a witchy state. Maybe she could even maintain control of her current self if she accepted this offer.

However, lack of blood and copious amounts of pain and despair and desperation probably rules out most of the methodical planning and analysis of the above.

So, let's flip a coin.

I'm not the person you were initially responding to, I'm merely playing devil's advocate. Kharn was earlier talking to someone with jet black eyes, who turned out to be a painting. If this is just another day in the life of the crazy inside her head, sure, but if it's not, she would know something's up (although not exactly what perhaps) and would be hesitant to accept

Well, the Third Incubator's day planner probably says something like "Ahriman meeting with Kharn today." And when he comes back, he's going to find a building which is a) on fire, b) has large holes in it and c) is filled with dead magical girls.

I'm fairly sure those two facts, put together will paint a sufficient picture.

Your smile is a sick, bloody mirror of the one curling Faust's lips. There are questions tearing through your mind as you sway unsteadily on your bladed feet, blinking at the proferred hand. What was she? Was she the Blessed Lady that Ahriman and Erebus had been babbling about? Was she the reason, the cause of this madness?

No. No time for questions. No time for introspection. This is not the time to get wishy-washy about this. No more delays.

You stumble forward as you grasp the hand, your bloodied claws curling over soft, warm fingers.

The moment you do is when the pink haze seems to lift from your vision. Gone is the crippling, dizzying vertigo that came with catastrophic blood loss. Gone is the sting of lactic acid in your arms, in your legs. Gone is the pain of white-hot skewers lancing through your stomach, scraping against your spine.

You've never felt - or thought - more clearly than you have now. Never in your entire life did you feel this...focused, this tautly-centered, so eager for combat. So eager for killing.

Apropos to absolutely nothing, you hear the coupled roar of two chain weapons coming to life on either side of you. Louder than Skulltaker in BURN mode, and frighteningly faster. Wilder.

You glance down on your hands - blinking once as you find them slack at your sides - and you stare at the monstrosities that you are now wielding, when you had only empty claws the moment before.

Chainaxes. She'd given you chainaxes. Two of them, one bigger than the other, both easily outstripping Skulltaker in size, in weight, in sheer potential murder.

You have a feeling that both of them should be brilliant gold.

If not for the dried, rusting blood nearly covering each massive axe. Only the handle is spared from the gruesome paintjob.

And in a rather strange touch - one that harkens back to the time when your father trained you how to kill - both chainaxes are tethered to your wrists with charcoal-black chainteeth tracks, the tracks themselves recognizable as Skulltaker's own. Cutting, grinding into your fleshmetal wrists with your every movement.

Instantly, without you even thinking, you know their names. Just as you are suddenly familiar with the pain now buzzing inside your mind, at the back of your skull.

Gorefather. Gorechild.

Murder given form. Vengeance given form.

Ahriman, with the raven wings jutting out from her back, with her visage twisted by corruption, lets the twitching body of your aide fall to the ground as she turns to face you. Seemingly having taken notice of your...transformation.

Abject fear and shock twisting her already deformed gaze.

She raises her pitiful little stick towards you, mouth already forming the arcane, blasphemous words that would bring your death.

Ahriman blocks your first strike.

Amazingly, and for the fifth time in your encounter with her - she manages to avoid death at your hands, her own coming up and presenting the snake-topped hequin staff as a barrier to the two chainaxes you've swung down in a brutal double-handed overhead chop. Her spell unfinished, the scent of blasted ozone and brimstone filling your nostrils as the whirring chainteeth struggle to bite into the perfectly-cylindrical haft of the staff. Sparks clawing into the air as the both of you try to push each other back.

"Im...impossible." Ahriman whispers, her corrupted gaze flickering with uncertainty. "The Blessed Lady...the Blessed Lady would not grace a Heretic with her gifts. T-this is blasphemy--"

You merely cackle at this, finding it useless to refute her claims. Indeed, you find any other course of action other than combat unappealing, even unsavory, almost. You have a Warmaster to kill, a Warmaster that had all but made a gimp out of your aide.

You do not take kindly to other people breaking your own things.

With a single push do you send Ahriman stumbling back - her wings immediately flaring out behind her and flapping a great, sudden downbeat, steadying her immediately - and it's then that you charge into her again, chainaxes whirring madly in your clawed grips. With quick, sweeping chops do you smash both Gorefather and Gorechild again and again into Ahriman's blockade, the Third Warmaster's fear-stink tickling your nostrils as she tries valiantly to hammer each rending blow aside, using her staff as a maul now. While her transformation had certainly improved her abilities, it is still clear that she was never meant to fight up close - or fight someone whose expertise is all about getting close in someone's face and shearing their skull right off their shoulders.

Ahriman shrieks bloody murder as you let Gorefather whet its appetite in a carving swing - and there's a sick squelch as the third Warmaster's right wing falls to the ether-blasted floor in a puff of rapidly-disintegrating feathers. An insultingly-clean wound in your opponent's back where the main joint of the wing had jutted out from.

Off-balance, Ahriman stumbles before you, landing clumsily.

Most, if not all, of our big fights are going to be against Golden Weapon wielders, who are typically too far gone mentally to care if they see Midori/Matsuda disguised as a friend/lover. Assuming of course they just don't conveniently see through such disguises. While lower level people might fall for such a ruse so we can backstab them or whatever, it's probably not worth the effort.

"Where are you going, pretty little raven?" You follow her stumbling, almost drunken stagger. Gorefather, the larger and the more brutish of the two chainaxes, roars in your grip, its three chainteeth tracks blurring as you clench your clawed fingers around the handle. "We still have much to talk about, you and I! There are many things we must discuss! COME, STAY A WHILE AND LISTEN, AHRIMAN!"

You end your words in a harsh cackle - just as you swing Gorefather in a low, sweeping cut - curving down from an overhead grip and then hooking in from the side, the thrice-tracked smile of the massive chainaxe ripping into Ahriman's right knee and instantly chewing through. The tortured scream has barely left the Warmaster's lips when her other kneecap - and the joint behind it - is shorn completely through in a meaty, blood-spattered screech.

The Third Warmaster drops heavily into the scorched, blasted floor once more, foul black blood spurting and gouting from her new stumps. The golden staff still grasped with one hand, she all but impresses you by trying to crawl away, murmuring prayers and pleas under her breath - but you stop her, kicking the staff away from her hand and then pressing one bladed foot on the center of her back. The blade-tip digging into the flesh above her spine.

Her remaining wing flaps erratically, weakly. It is already shedding feathers, revealing a mange-ridden, fleshy mutation.

Her voice has changed now, truly. The elegant voice that spoke of nobility and royalty, replaced by a deeper, rougher growl. Even now you can smell the corruption wafting from her, not of the Witch, but of something else.

The twin chainaxes, Gorefather and Gorechild, growl hungrily in your hands. The chains tethering them to your wrists clanking gently.

What do you do? Ahriman seems to be helpless, right now.

As I said before, Midori probably isn't going to be very useful in a straight-up fight later on. But assuming that Chiaki makes it to Warmaster position, we can use her and our vast resources to make it a lopsided fight whenever we can. We did this to a very limited degree with Misaka and Sayaka support when we were taking down Kirika. In fact, if we didn't bring Misaka along, it's likely that we would have lost or ended up using the Deagle to kill Kirika (and Mami as well?).

We've always said that we need to come up with better plans to take down these crazies. I'm not about to write off someone who could become a PMM version of a Terran Ghost or Spectre with the proper training. Utility is never a bad thing.

"N-no...not at the moment of our apotheosis...n-not when there is still so much work to be done for the Blessed Lady..." Ahriman is moaning now, mournful in her lamentations, struggling to crawl away from you despite your having her pinned to the floor with your bladed foot on her back. Easing your grip slightly on both Gorefather and Gorechild - the twin chainaxes' deafening roar quieting down into a purring murmur as they idle - you nudge her gently with your other foot, breaking her off from her groaning.

"You disgust me," You say after a moment, looking down at the once-proud Warmaster. "Here we are, at the twilight of your life, and all you are doing is moan and complain about the cards you have been dealt." Cheerfully, you slap Gorechild across the ground in front of her, the suddenly-active chainteeth ripping a furrow into the concrete, chewing through tile and fixture with a shower of sparks that makes Ahriman flinch. "Face your end with dignity and pride, even when you have so little to be proud of now!"

"T-the...the Blessed Lady..."

"The Blessed Lady is no longer with you, Ahriman." You let this out in an annoyed sigh. "I think, with your performance now, no Blessed Lady will want to be involved with you." Letting Gorechild fall to the ground beside you - the chainaxe landing blade-first, embedding itself into the concrete - you reach forward to grab a fistful of her hair, pulling her head back. "Now, before I kill you and take your skull, you will answer my question. Why Mami Tomoe? Why go through all this trouble for one blonde, eh? TELL ME!"

Actually:
1_ They'll regenerate until they run out of magic. Then, they'll witch.
2_ If they don't know about the soul gem thing, if they receive what they think is lethal damage, they'll despair and witch.

Both count as dying.

Ahriman won't be joining her beloved after we kill her. Her soul will be transferred to the staff, forever doomed to be a hateful presence in the weapon.

The same will happen to Kharn, her and Malal will not be reunited in hell.

>>20961751

"Ngh...! The...Blessed Lady...Her True Herald opens the way!" Ahriman gasps through a mouthful of fangs, each word causing blood to spill from her lips. "The way leads to the Golden Truth...a-and the Black Sarcophagus must never be given to the Irregular!"

"..." You stare down at Ahriman for the briefest moment, before flexing your grip on Gorefather and seperating her head from her neck in one smooth movement.

If there is anything you hate, it is cryptic messages. You have no time for such nonsense.

The moment that Ahriman's head rolls free does her Soul Gem also clatter to the floor - it seems that she'd been wearing it as a necklace pendant, of all things. However, what at least should be brightly-colored is now dark, almost completely black, concealing what color it had been originally. You've seen the same kind of darkness in Magical Girls you've been forced to retire, and those desperately in need of a Grief Seed.

You waste no time in crunching it into powder underfoot. At the very least, you have honored your promise to Erebus. She will be joined in Hell by her Warmaster, and such a reunion is more than they deserve.

It is then that you rush towards Malal, your half-dismembered aide, currently lying in a pool of her own blood, beside an unconscious Murderface. It is then that you see where the gunshots had come from - somehow, Malal had procured an astounding number of firearms from somewhere, and she had emptied out every one in her attempt to fend Ahriman off. Their smoking, nearly-melted ruins littering the ground around the both of them.

With two ragged, bleeding holes in her suit where her arms should be, Malal seems to be breathing, but faintly. Her pulse isn't all that strong either, but it's there. Murderface is the same way, except she's just unconscious, not armless.

While we wait for help to arrive we can attempt to wake up Malal. Check Malal's, Murderface's, and our own soul gem, cleanse as necessary. If we lack grief seeds, then tell the evac to bring some.
During all of this STAY ON GUARD, I highly doubt that no one heard or saw the huge battle in the building either directly or through security cameras. Once the evac team gets here and the 2 girls are taken care of, search the

You glance down at the chainaxes still tethered to your wrists - and almost as if sensing your own thoughts, both Gorefather and Gorechild go completely still, and the chainteeth tracks securing them onto your person fall slack, draping down to the floor. With an almost reverent care you place the two impressive murder machines onto the ground, a bit away from Murderface and Malal, before you tend to your aide once more. Pulling out your own smartphone after a moment's thought.

You cradle the device between cheek and shoulder as you give all three of you Soul Gem checks. Yours hasn't changed from this morning, so you are not worried. Murderface's is...a bit darker than you'd like it to be, but not anything to be scared about. Malal's own Soul Gem Purity display comes to life on her visor, as you press on a hidden button near the jaw of her helmet - and you see that she's well within acceptable levels. You make a note to send for three grief seeds, just in case.

The phone at the other side rings, and who answers but Kyuubey himself.

"Valnikov? Hm, I wasn't expecting you to call back so quickly. I thought you'd take a bit more time engaging in wanton slaughter. What do you need?"

You shake your head at this, before reaching out to slap Malal's helmet a few times, trying to rouse her. It is not good for her to sleep with such grievous wounds. She must be awake.

"N-no, I...I don't want to go to school again, they keep making fun of me..." Malal's feeble, petulant whisper is carried embarrassingly clearly by her voxsponder. In any other situation, you would have laughed.

What do you say to Kyuubey?

From what QB mentioned about Chiaki's partnership with Kharn, it seemed like there was a 6 month partnership period with Kharn (after she stepped down as Warmaster) and a 6 month period in which Murderface worked alone. There's still a 6 month gap unaccounted for in this flashback, as this was ~1.5 years before Chiaki's trip to Siberia. There may still be yet more adventures in store for Malal/Kharn/Murderface, unless Kharn regards a single particularly violent incident as being "old times".

"Sending two medevacs to your location as we speak. SANY Tower, right? Top floor, or what little remains of it." A sigh. "I can only anticipate the explanation my brother has for this. Will you be needing Grief Seeds? I'll send a proper cache along with the evac, just in case."

You thank him. Sometimes, despite him being an unfeeling alien most of the time, Kyuubey can be rather efficient. You then ask him if the medics can, at all, reattach severed arms.

"Why, of course they can. What kind of a question is that?" Kyuubey seems almost amused. "Try and keep Malal stable until the medevac arrives. Culexus are getting increasingly hard to find and train, so it'd be a shame to lose our most potent one now."

You reply that you'll do your best, and also make sure that Malal realizes how important she is to your mutant cat boss. It will surely give her a hand in recovering from this unfortunate event.

"Hm. Well, yes carry on, then, Valnikov." Kyuubey replies, just as you kick Malal's boots again, in an attempt to keep her awake. "I'll have your debriefing when everything's a bit more manageable, including your aide's and your new subordinate's. I'll be very interested in hers especially."

... You know, at some point in MGNQ, we need to start a vendetta against cultists.

A specific one, that is. So we'd need to actually have a clear idea of a cult, rather than just running into cultists and weird shit.

And a vendetta, so that we can threaten them. Preferably to get something of ours back--either pancakes or alcohol I imagine. And with a shotgun.

The vendetta does not have to actually be real or exist.

To complete the reference, Murderface should be drunk enough and slurring her words that the cultists can't even tell what she's talking about, before she shotguns or burns them to death...

I wonder if that might refer to some sort of Culexus stuff?

Maybe it's a suit that has to do with Culexus powers, or otherwise something to do with anti-magic.

It would certainly be a reason to keep an irregular away from such a thing... If the Sarcophagus is some kind of Culexus artifact, then it might be a threat to Faust.

Or it could just fuck the world up even more. Or fuck Faust up for the WORSE, turning her into a truly malevolent Witch hell-bent on destruction, rather than the insane but still kindasorta human Witch she is now.

"Christ, Kharn, for a moment there I thought I was done for. What took you so long? You were just standing there, staring off into space. Is that something of a stunt, or what?"

You open your mouth to reply, before Malal shakes her head again. "No, no, nevermind, I don't want to know. The important thing right now is we're all safe. Relatively." She finds it in herself to laugh, and you scoot in beside her, sitting next to her as both of you lean back at the only remaining section of wall cover left. You make to punch her shoulder, but it would be awkward, so you give her helmet a little bit of a smack, instead. With your open claws.

>Get an Ushanka hat for Kyouko.

>If we have to go under for a month to resist the corruption, we should let everyone who likes us know we'll be delayed. Luckily, this is a very short list. Mami, Kyouko (inquire after recovery and impending Hue), Iori, Pinky (lol)

>We may want to call [Kaname Madoka] and [???] again sometime to see if they start working.

>In addition to the killswitch, we can apparently track and 'take control' of Midori through the soul link, which could be... interesting. We might try it to see how it works. (We could literally make her hips move on their own!)

>On the subject of green and eager, we should probably have a talk with her. Suggested topics - Golden weapons/Pinky/FoFA, We're a bad end waiting to happen to her, she seems a bit stockholm syndrome

>Oriko is still out there and probably still incredibly mad. We should keep an eye on that, she could easily make a wish for vengeance.

>Fabiola's meido boss has issues she'll want to pester us about eventually.

>We might ask how and how much Kharn knows about golden weapons.

>If we actually end up Warmastering, we'll need an aide. Midori has trust issues with the rest of the officio, and Kyoko and Sayaka come as a pair, so, there's problems/fun either way.

I'mma say with regards to aides, we take the Rokugani approach.

Kyouko is our right hand, the iron fist, she wrecks shit for us when we need shit wrecked.

Mami is our left hand, the velvet glove. She does people things, manages PR, looks after the emotional wellbeing of the girls in the officio, and makes us pancakes.

Midori is our underhand, for when we want to dick people over. She does intel, espionage and counterespionage.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/05/12(Fri)08:58 No.20999517

You are a Magical Girl, you've spent the better part of four hours listening to your former partner talk about the parts of your life that you've forgotten about entirely.

Well, no, not forgotten entirely. You remember some bits - some really tiny, specific ones that seemed so out of context that at first you'd thought they were something you dreamed about and dismissed them as nothing more than visions brought about by bad hangovers.

It is a rather strange experience, though. To hear about yourself, doing things. Killing.

You remember...something happening, in an office building, somewhere, that had made you so angry that you saw the entire world blur gently around you, losing all color, while ice mercury seemed to slowly fill your veins, coursing through a heart that beat just a little too slowly, a little too calmly.

You remember Kyoko, still with both her eyes, cheerfully visiting you everyday in the Silent Room, during your isolation from the rest of the Officio, despite getting into a heated argument with Sayaka each time she did. She always brought Pocky, and fed you herself while you hung from the cold, freezing chains.

And you remember the first time Mami made pancakes for you.

No one forgets their first time. Especially not something as magical as that.

It is currently night time, in Siberia. You and your former partner, Valnikov Kharn, are currently eating bear steak under an impressively-clear night sky, in the front courtyard of the Officio's heavily-fortified and heavily-guarded Research and Development base. Your subordinate is currently sleeping off her injuries in your room, and your arms dealer is probably doing the same, with the two Petes keeping her company.

Kharn had just finished recounting her first encounter of you, and the events that brought it about. It's...certainly been informative. The killing spree wasn't so surprising - you'd have done it regardless of how many there were, or what consequences would befall you if you did. No one gets to talk about Tomoe Mami like that and live to see the next sunrise.

Learning about Malal, well, it's slightly disconcerting. Sure, you could see yourself hanging out with someone like her, even if you sounded completely like the murderous autist. But even as Kharn described her, described how the both of you seemed to get along reasonably well - nothing comes up in your mind about her. Try as you might, you are unable to remember how her voice sounded as she taught you what drink to order in a wet bar if you're not in a hurry to get wasted. You cannot, for the life of you, even recall a single thing about the Culexus that seemed like quite the capable aide to a Warmaster like Kharn. A capable aide, and a good friend, one that you probably would find handy watching your back.

How? How could you just forget someone like that?

You are still asking yourself that question when Kharn finally seemed to take notice of your silence. The grill in front of you is now empty of steaks, the coals smoldering as they are left to cool.

>>20999534

Kharn's soldiers had lined up earlier beside the grill to get their share - and it was interesting, at least, to watch your former partner attend to her grizzled, hardened lot, like a doting, large-chested older sister would to her younger brothers.

And the soldiers seemed to behave as such, loudly and raucously joking and laughing with their comrades, but turning bashful, almost shy, when it came for Kharn to fill their plates. She greeted them all by name, in the middle of attending to the grill and telling you her tales. She had started telling you about how she had gladly led you and Malal into the Third Warmaster's trap when the line had finally dwindled to nothing.

"Murderface?" Your former partner asks you from her own folding chair, a plate of chili sauce-soaked bear steak on her lap, her black armored legs crossed demurely on top of each other. You turn slightly to acknowledge her, and you watch as she spears a slice of the bear steak with her fork - the utensil wielded delicately and mesmerizingly by brutal claws.

Briefly, you wonder how it would feel like having your heart torn out with those things.

"Comrade Murderface, are you still alive?" Kharn asks again, brow furrowing as she brandishes the loaded fork at you. "You have been much too quiet, even after I have finished telling you my tale. Are you in awe of my storytelling skills, or did you fall asleep?" A chuckle. "Or...is it that you have a question for me? I am sure you have, by that look on your face. You are free to ask anything you wish."

>>20999547

You glance down at your own plate of bear steak - the meat is surprisingly tender, and whatever Kharn had done to the meat, it's countenanced the rather cloying sweetness of it. You take another bite, chewing slowly as you consider how to respond. Kharn's no Mami when it comes to cooking, but it's certainly palatable.

You wash down the morsel of roasted predator with a swig of cold vodka, the bottle open and placed on the ice-packed cement beside your own chair.

How do you respond? What do you ask?

Learning more about Malal seems prudent over Pinky and the axes but if it's possible to ask in sequence, that'd be awesome.

Having absolutely no memory of her seems strange. Either Kharn made her up or maybe she was erased from existance with only Kharn remembering her. Maybe Malal's own anti-magic properties backfired and snuffed her out.

um.....

>That's...as close as you'll get to seeing an assignment being reported. No one can make something like that disappear like Kyuubey - for all you know he sent his Culexus squad to wipe a few minds clean of what they saw that night, the poor bastards. You've heard that some of them actually have enough mastery over their abilities that they can affect human minds, too, not just Magical Girls.

It seems like Culexus can effect minds with their null power. So, whatever scrubbed our minds is centred around

Malal so it is likely she is doing it.

Why?

Well If I were to take a guess, I suppose the original Homura is sending instructions to Malal about what to do with her 'native' copy every-time she rewinds tim. In the last cycle Murderface didn't go with the plan and tried to face pinky by herself. Homura decided to try to expunge the Murderface persona from her 'native' copy by erasing memories of the time spent with Kharn.

"Malal?" Kharn echoes as she leans back on her seat, clawed hand reaching out towards the vodka bottle in your hand. Wordlessly, you pass it to her, and she takes a long, healthy pull from it, her breath misting in the cold winter air as she exhales.

"I was hoping talking about her would jog your memory some, at least, but I suppose we must take it one day at a time, yes?" Your former partner smiles as she hands the bottle back. Your fingers briefly brushing against her fleshmetal claws as you take it from her.

"Well, what is there to know about Malal?" Kharn shrugs, although her voice changes the slightest bit. "She was my best friend, and I would like to think she was yours, too. You certainly got along well enough. She was a very good aide, as I am sure you have inferred. Consider that your first lesson, Murderface, on Warmastering."

Kharn points at you with her fork. "A Warmaster is nothing without her aide. She does everything else so you can focus on being a Warmaster. She carries your standard, she handles all annoying paperwork and logistics - and if she is good enough, she can make you look like a hero even if you are...well, us." The russian Magical Girl laughs, a coarse sound. "So make sure to pick yours with care."

A cough. "There are more things that need to be said about Malal, but let us leave that for another day. I have read that those with amnesia, they should not be rushed into remembering, yes? But there is time, a lot of time to tell. Do not worry." She nods to herself. "Yes. Everything is under control."

A moment more, and she considers your question. "Ah, about...Pinky, is that what you call her? She has many names. Faust is the name she gave me, so that is what I told Kyuubey. Erebus and Ahriman, they call her the Blessed Lady."

Kharn glances towards you. "Some say she is a delusion of Magical Girls becoming sick, Kyuubey maintains that she is a Witch that has transcended beyond what we normally encounter. That she has become a god, or something."

She laughs, again. "I am finding it hard to believe, even now. But what do you call someone like her? A monster? Or perhaps, the Devil herself?"

A moment of silence, before your former partner speaks once more. "I told you about her because I feel that you should know. Looking at you, Murderface...you have met her, already, and multiple times. Beware of her and her honeyed words, and her gifts. And speaking of her gifts, Gorechild and Gorefather are in the vault, along with your other toys. They have been there ever since I came here."

You take another swig from the vodka bottle. Belatedly, you realize that you've basically traded indirect kisses with your former partner and Warmaster, but you're not too concerned about that at the moment.

How do you respond?

That is something that is worrying. Either Jyuubey has some way of tracking Midori despite her contract/wish being overwritten, or he already had Mirai in the area for a separate mission when we confronted her. Using the whole Midori incident could merely be a cover-up for whatever Mirai was really doing in the middle of nowhere.

This is ignoring the probable fact that all the Incubators are working toward a common goal, and these squabbles mean less than nothing to them in the end.

True. As >>21000077 posted, trying to get Midori back could just be a cover like trying to get revenge for the 3 squads of girls Murderface killed.
Gorefather and Gorechild were stored here as soon as Kharn was sent here, so Mirai could have been trying to break in and grab the Golden Weapons under orders from yet another Gold Weapon wielding Warmaster. Or the 10th Incubator has a scheme of his own.
We need Kharn to tell us what happened to the 3rd Incubator, if anyone managed to tie his involvement to Ahriman's actions.

Or Mariai could be scouting out for a Pleiades Saint raid. And now that we have captured Marai plans to attack the facility could be accelerated in hopes to get the saint back.

I got an idea.
Misaka is going to be upset that she missed the opportunity to hunt bears using Tiny Pete and thanks to us there are not going to be any bears around here for a while (if ever).

We could tell her that we think the base might be attacked and she should prep Tiny Pete for base defence. It doesn't matter if we are right nor not, it will give her something to do for the month we are out.

I actually think that Wakaba Mirai could still be useful to us. From the Mangos and from what Midori told us about them the Saints are pretty close.
So there will be more of them after us after we supposedly killed Mirai. That`s way we should keep her gem and not destroy it, simply as a bargaining chip if more of them should show up.

Other than that, we were pretty lucky that only one of the Saints showed up, since their strenght is pretty much based on their coordinated Group-Attacks.

Anyway, without Timestop Murderface is pretty much fucked should two or more Saints show up after Mirai.

"Ah, yes. The Third Incubator." It's here that Kharn seems to frown as she carves another slice from what remains of her own steak - spearing it with her fork but pushing it around her plate, seemingly contemplative. "I was there in Kyuubey's Office, a day after we killed his Warmaster. You were not there, you were still recovering, along with Malal. In retrospect, that in itself is a good thing, I suppose..." She lifts the loaded fork to her mouth and chews delicately. "You would have seen me in a very angry mood."

As soon as she finishes chewing, it's then that your former partner tells you about how Kyuubey had asked her to witness the call he made to his brother. What showed up on the massive screens in front of you was...well, someone similar to Kyuubey, in all respects, except this one had blue eyes rather than crimson.

The meeting began cordially enough, both Incubators greeting each other and talking about the weather, the economy, and how their businesses were faring. Kharn had noted here that Kyuubey seemed particularly boastful about QB Heavy Industries' recent acquisitions, while Sanbey seemed to be rather eager about business process outsourcing. It was like listening to two businessmen do lunch; dry, boring, and completely obsessed about the bottom line.

It's only after a few minutes that Kyuubey then breached the subject of the entire incident, the events that lead up to you, Kharn and Malal killing off his Warmaster and her retinue. A hundred Magical girls, not counting the ones you yourself slaughtered.

"He simply shrugged, Murderface." Kharn says, taking another swig from the vodka bottle the both of you have been doing your best to kill.

"Shrugged and said that he had no idea what Ahriman had done, or what had transpired. He said that he could not have cared less about his Magical Girl division; he had declared them already an autonomous section of his organization, free to do what they wanted. He had no knowledge that the previous Warmaster had been killed by Ahriman, or that Ahriman had declared herself Warmaster. He was much too busy organizing...the business side of his Officio. All he cared about was new contracts, new business, and that the girls would deposit grief seeds as necessary."

As she went on, Kharn describes to you how Kyuubey seemed unsurprised at this, and took his brother's explanation well enough. He did, however, posit that if Sanbey didn't need the other girls, then what if Kyuubey took them off his hands?

"You should have seen that damn Incubator's eyes light up when Kyuubey suggested that." Kharn spits out a piece of bear bone, wincing. "Couldn't have said yes fast enough. He said that he was getting annoyed at them, at how they seemed to always look for his approval at everything, even after their wishes. The mere smell alone of a Magical Girl sickened him."

And with that, the Ninth Officio gained eight hundred or so new recruits, all of their contracts transferred to Kyuubey's. SANY was also integrated into the company soon after. The agreement was Sanbey would stop contracting girls, but instead get a fraction of the spent Grief Seeds that Kyuubey also got.

"I was expecting a bloody war, a full mobilization," Kharn sighs, clearly wistful. "It would have been fun, you know? Tearing up Mitakihara in a proper war. It would have been glorious, I think. But Incubators are so annoyingly reasonable and businesslike, sometimes I am thinking that they have stopped being aliens and became something worse!"

"Hnn, by the way. I am sure you have more questions to ask, Murderface." Kharn suddenly speaks up. "But if you are wanting to call home, then tell me. Unfortunately, smartphone reception here is not very good, so we have to use other means." She grins at you, clearly teasing. "I am sure there are many back home that want to hear your voice again, even if it had just been a few days."

First, we call Kyuubei, and call him a dickfaced lying douchebag.
Then hang up on him and call Mami, and tell her we might be out for a few months, and ask her to tell Sayaka and Kyoko. Also ask her if bringing them both on as our aides seems like a good idea. Who was her aide, anyway?
And then call Iori and apologise for being a bitch, and tell her about the procedure.

It doesn't really seem like they need to eat (aside from disposing of dead incubators) or would otherwise need money, let alone Earth money. My only guess in the desire for power, but they pretty much have that in controlling magical girls.

Unfortunately, I do not think Chiaki possesses the social skills required to do this, so we're fucked. If we do it through a middleman then it won't have the same effect.

But Midori is a magical girl, she can handle herself in dire situations, as shown earlier when she held onto Chiaki as she went black eyed. Iori is a normal girl, who has gone through some hardships recently. She does not have the means of coping with the 'Murderface Experience'. We can keep her friendly at a distance, but subjecting her to more trauma just to see if she could handle it is not a good thing to do. What if she does stay? "Heh. Yes, that is what I thought you would say." Kharn says as she slips out of her folding chair, in a movement that is almost unnatural in its smoothness and grace. "It is only prudent, of course, to tell them that you have arrived and are safe and sound. You do not want them to worry." It's then that she claps her brutally-clawed hands, the sharp impact of metal upon metal cracking across the courtyard. "Sergei! Nikolai! Please clean up after us, yes? The Warmaster has important business to attend to!"

The soldiers that had gathered around a bonfire at the other end of the courtyard cheer at this, and Kharn smiles before placing her plate on her vacated chair. You clamber out of your own chair yourself, if a bit clumsily - for a folding affair, it was comfortable and getting a bit hard to get out of, but certainly nothing close to the lovingly-upholstered piece of heaven you've left back home.

You let out a small groan as you manage to get back at your feet, both new and old pains and aches flaring up, reminding you of just how close you've come to death today. You make a small note to get some painkillers inside of you later. You leave your own plate where Kharn had left hers, while taking the half-empty bottle of vodka with you.

The journey to the 'Communications Room' as Kharn had introduced it is a short one; it seems to be in a floor between the surface and the subterranean living quarters of the R&D base. It is a rather...antiquated room, full of bulky machinery that seems to be hooked up to each other, and there's a slight static buzz in the air that makes your teeth itch as Kharn flicks a couple of switches on.

In the center of a room is a rather comfortable-looking chair facing a large, towering screen. You recognize it immediately as one similar to Kyuubey's personal chair at the Officio. It's only after a few moments that you finally realize that this was to be the Incubator's own control hub, for the off-chance that he would actually visit. The fact that the chair itself had rather archaic-looking keyboards built into its armrests seemed to support your idea.

You ask Kharn if your suspicions are true, and she makes a pleased, impressed grunt.

"Ah, you are very observant, yes? You are correct, this was formerly made to accommodate the Incubator in the times when he would visit. Unfortunately, or fortunately, he has never visited for too long, usually it is just an ocular inspection. Besides, him and Souji regularly converse on his laptop." Kharn mimes typing on an invisible with both clawed hands, a curiously amusing gesture. "Sometimes, they get into arguments, but mostly about stupid things."

"In any case, communication console is already switched on. Take seat there." Kharn gently ushers you onto the commanding leather chair. "On right armrest is letter keypad, on left is numbers. Just input the number you want, and press send. Call will automatically connect. Could be whoever you want, really." It's then that Kharn giggles. "Ah, I remember pranking Totally Awesome Sweet Alabama Liquid Snake with this one. She manages a bar in her spare time, in America, you see. Prank calls are something she hates."

You nod. That seems easy enough. And pranking? That's surprising. You'd never have taken Kharn to be the sort to do that.

"Is harmless fun." Kharn shrugs, still grinning. "It gets boring here sometimes."

After checking in with Mami, we really should call QB and let him know that one of the 10th's MG's was snooping around the R&D base.
He's already identified the Tenth as a rogue Incubator, one who may not be playing by the rules the Incubators set up for themselves, and is trying to hunt him down.
This might light a fire under that mutant cat's ass to put more resources into finding Jyuubei and removing him permanently.

I just think it becomes a bit more serious the more lives it puts on the line. As far as we know as Chiaki, at any point while wielding those weapons we could have completely lost it. Killing at least one other magical girl depending on the mission and possibly dying ourselves.

From the point of alien logic QB didn't do anything wrong, or from a rules lawyer standpoint either. But from where Chiaki is I can imagine more than a few hurt feelings for those omissions.

You make your decision, and punch in Tomoe Mami's number by rote memory alone. She'd probably want an update on the message she asked you to send the pilot, as well as tell her how you're doing in Siberia. Yes, that would only be proper - you can't have her worrying herself sick over you, after all. Your personal goddess of pancakes and fortune deserves just more than that.

The screen in front of you hums as the call initiates; the sound of the other end of the line ringing a bit scratchy, but otherwise audible and clear. Mami picks up at the fourth ring, and the words [SOUND ONLY] in rather sinister-looking crimson typeface glow into existence on the screen's surface, imposing and almost warning-like.

Pity. A friendly face that wasn't Kharn's would be nice about now.

"Hello?" Mami's voice comes on, breathy, hurried. As if you'd caught her in the middle of something. "Chiaki-san? Is this you? The number's unlisted, I didn't know who it was at first." Another moment. "Are you...are you calling from Siberia? Did you arrive there safely? Is Misaka-chan and Midori-chan alright? Have you eaten already?"

You try to answer Mami's barrage of questions as best as you can while glancing towards Kharn pointedly, who seems to be listening in rapt attention to the blonde's warm voice. She finally seems to notice, her cheeks reddening, and your former partner excuses herself, embarrassed. "Will be waiting outside, take your time," the ex-Warmaster whispers, before tiptoeing out of the room, gently closing the door behind her with a click.

"...Oh, I see. Well, it's good that you got there safely. I'm not really a fan of flying myself, to be honest. I'd rather drive if I wanted to get anywhere." A small giggle. "But yes, I'm glad you got there without any worries. I heard it was quite the rough flight."

Well, it wasn't really rough, but the smiling pink demon in your nightmares did drop by and visit for a chat(You don't tell her this, of course), so it may as well be considered that.

You tell her instead that you've followed her request to the letter.

"...Thank you, Chiaki-san." Another stifled giggle. "I'm sorry if I had to make you do that. I know, it seems a bit cruel, but I believe he really needed that. I could've done it myself, but..."

You momentarily imagine Mami punching someone out, before shaking your head. Impossible. Mami's not the sort.

You tell her that it was your pleasure to do so, and she giggles again. "Thank you, Chiaki-san. I promise not to give you too many of those weird requests, but I'm glad to know I can count on you, even when you're about to become Warmaster." It's then that her voice turns a bit cheeky. "Don't forget us little people when you're famous, Chiaki-san!"

Soul Gems need to be within 100 (feet or meters, can't remember) for the body to work. Plus some materials could block the gem's "control frequency".

Mami may have been surprised at the tinge of desperate reasurrance at your still-deadpan, slightly-hoarse voice, as she somewhat stumbles on her reply. "I-I was just kidding, Chiaki-san! I know you won't forget us, you're much too kind for that! Besides, you never forgot our names even when you were still having problems remembering your own name, so I'm not worried at all! I'm sure you'll make a great Warmaster, just remember not to be shy to ask us for help if you need it. Kyoko-chan, Sayaka-chan and I will be behind you one hundred percent!"

...You're certainly glad for her being in your corner, like Kyoko is, but Sayaka...well, you're not too sure about that. You thank her still, however, but not before asking her what really got you chosen as a viable Warmaster candidate. Sure, you managed to get through three missions without...screwing up too much, but that doesn't necessarily mean that you'd be a great leader, right?

"You're selling yourself much too short, Chiaki-san!" Mami chides you, and you hear the rustle of cloth in the background. "It's not just the popular vote that counts! There are recommendations from the other rank leaders, feedback from previous clientele, how well you've been doing in Kyuubey's monthly performance reviews...everything, really! Although..." A moment's silence. "...I do wonder. Kumatora-san, if you remember her, was talking about this manga that seemed to feature you, of all things. Would you happen to know anything about that, Chiaki-san?"

More cloth rustling. "Oh, and things are quiet over here, if you're wondering. Nothing to report, really. Although Iori-chan did call me, earlier, to ask if there were any good restaurants around Mitakihara I could recommend. She said something about a date?"

She is Mom, Dad and big Sister all fused into one, so while Chiaki may have a crush on her and adore her, I think that we shouldn`t act on it.

A date? You blink slowly at the screen in front of you, the red font on the black surface blurring slightly. Iori was asking Mami for restaurant recommendations for a date?

You blink again as you glance down at your left hand - it's trembling, slightly. You pull it towards your lap and clasp it with your other. Biting on your lip momentarily to gather your thoughts, let this surprising tidbit of information sink in.

"Well, I didn't really ask if it was for a date, but it certainly seemed that way. I gave her recommendations to that lobster place in the Upper District, that's always a nice place to eat, not too high-class, but good food." A pause. "Chiaki-san? Is something the matter? You're breathing kind of heavily...or is that the static? I know reception isn't really good over there..."

You mumble something out just as you shake your head, before loudly clearing your throat. You're fine, you tell her. Just probably a cloud or something interrupting the signal. If Iori's dating, then...that's a good thing, right? It's best all around, really, if she found someone else a bit more stable - both financially and mentally - than you, someone who could provide her whatever she wants or needs. Someone who doesn't constantly try to one-up herself on trying to kill every last brain cell in her head with an overdose of painkillers, bad moonshine and Kong. Someone who can give her a safe home to come home to, not a dingy apartment that smells of gun oil and stale alcohol.

Someone who's not you, put simply enough. No one deserves having to put up with you for too long. Mami already does, and that's enough. No need to burden anyone else.

It's the right thing to do. It's the right thing to do. The right thing.

"Hmm, I see. Well, I'm glad you think that way, Chiaki-san. You're right, it's the best all around." Mami's voice is cheerful, seeing as she isn't exactly privy to your train of thought, only the bits you say. "She's got a future of her own, despite the things that've been happening left and right. With any luck, that Garcia boy and her friends will get her back on her feet soon enough. And no, Chiaki-san, I don't believe she's been contracted, that would be just silly. Kyuubey wouldn't do such a thing, not to someone like her."

...Yeah. Garcia. You resist the temptation to growl out the name, but instead you take a swig from the vodka bottle you've brought into the room with you.

The right thing.

At least you don't have to worry about Kyuubey suddenly announcing Iori as his latest recruit.

More rustling of cloth in the background. You try to ignore it as you deny any and all knowledge about a certain manga featuring you. Well, you've heard about it, but that's only what you know. You have a suspicion your latest subordinate would have an idea about it, however.

"Oh? Midori-chan? Hmm. Well, I suppose I can ask her about it when you get back. I heard a few of the girls in the cafeteria talking about how it's going to be adapted into an after-dark anime soon, by a popular anime studio, no less."

Being friends is fine. She doesn't need to be out of our lives, she just needs to be able to cope without relying on us or being in a situation where she could be turned into a target.

So long as we maintain at least the public appearance of a cold bitch who'd put a bullet through even Mami over failing to complete a job, things will be fine. Note, we don't actually have to act like that, we just need people to think we do.

What about Kumatora? And how much older Iori is from Misaka? Chiaki experienced both admiration and love already.
Iori has nothing to make Chiaki care this much. I'm not saying she should disregard her but this?
Two days of pouting, masturbation session, pretty dress and that's It?

With Iori having purchased your services, you've been taken off the duty rotation - as such, you didn't need to check in every day with Kyuubey to find out if you were to be assigned someplace else. Different type of love (if you can really call Misaka and Mirderface's relationship that) which is more like siblings and admiration =/= love, Kumatora we have seen idolizes Murderface and we respect that she still likes us even after we trained her but we don't get any lesbian lust waves coming from her on the homudar so she is either running silent or doesn't actually want to bang Murderface

I think the main problem is that a bunch of waifu fags wanted to romance her at first so Deculture put in Matsuda's feelings for Iori. Thankfully, it seems everyone has more or less come to their senses and realized what a terrible idea romance is in a noir.

You give the now almost-empty bottle of vodka a healthy pull before you trust yourself to talk once more. Trying to ignore the burning in your chest, you tell Mami that you're not too sure how long you'll be staying in Siberia, and there might be the possibility that it would take you months before you're able to get home. If that should happen, could you trust her to make sure that everyone knows, so people won't start to wonder?

"Of course, Chiaki-san. Leave it to me." Mami's voice is bright, cheerful, warm like a plate of freshly-cooked pancakes dripping with syrup and butter. "I'll make sure everyone who needs to know does so."

You thank her for that, and go on to tell her how you've been catching up with the Betrayer lately. You tell her that you'd gladly slaughter as many squads of Eversors to keep her safe. She's saved you enough times that you don't even remember any of it, and you apologize for that.

A moment of silence, before a pleased, if hesitant smile colors Mami's voice. "I'm...no, Chiaki-san, you don't have to thank me. You needed rescuing. You would have done the same for me - and you did, albeit in a rather roundabout and really...bloody way." A sigh. "Of course, I'm...I'm not saying I'm alright with what you did, back then, but...thank you, too, Chiaki-san. You really go out of your way to intimidate people, but you're just a softy underneath, aren't you?"

A softy. First time you've been called that, by Mami of all people. But sure. Why not.

You bring up the subject of aides after a few moments, and how you're going to need aides when all is said and done. You drop Kyoko's name as one of your prospects, and Mami seems surprised at this. Surprised, but not at all displeased.

"Kyoko-chan? That's...that's actually a good choice, Chiaki-san!" Mami nods, agreeing quickly. "Kyoko-chan's great with handling people, both in and out of combat! She's not too good with paperwork, though, so you'll have to look at getting another aide for that...o-oh, and I'd clear it with Sayaka-chan too, just in case. You're the Warmaster, of course, you don't need to, but it's a nice thing to do."

Yes. Of course. You'll consider it. You let out the breath you've been holding, and glance down at the hands on your lap.

Your left hand's stopped trembling, at least.

Some more rustling, and it's loud enough that you cannot ignore it any longer. You ask Mami, then, with your usual tact and subtlety, if you called at a bad time.

"W-what? I...um..." Mami is clearly taken aback by this. "N-no, of course not, Chiaki-san! I'm not sleeping with anyone! N-not at the moment!"

"I'm telling you it's nothing, Chiaki-san. Please believe me, alright?" There it was. That tiny note in Mami's voice that, while still pleasant, told you that you had better stop this line of questioning, or there will be words. Not that she meant any harm by it - just that Mami had always been a private person. She would share anything with you, give you anything you wanted from her, but she would never allow anyone to get into her own affairs if she didn't want them to at the first place. And you respected that.

Like you will do, right now.

"If there's nothing else, then, Chiaki-san?"

You let out a sigh and say that you don't have anything. Only that you miss her.

You are sober enough, at least, to leave out 'and your pancakes'.

Mami's voice softens at that. "I miss you too, Chiaki-san. Please, take care of yourself. I'll be waiting for you until you get back. Until then, please take care of Misaka-chan and Midori-chan, okay? Oh, and please say hello to Kharn for me, and thank her for taking care of you!"

In a previous thread, it was suggested that there would be several ideal people in Chiaki's cabinet:

Kyouko - for the regular aide stuff (excluding paperwork) and social skills.

Mami - for advice and pancakes and additional PR.

Sayaka - since taking Kyouko alone would lead to more unneeded animosity. Plus, she respects but doesn't like Chiaki; she might be able to give us blunt and honest and unbiased feedback/criticism. She may also serve as a reasonable representative of what the Officio thinks about something as a whole.

Midori - for spywork, subterfuge, paperwork (and any aide stuff that Kyouko can't or won't handle). Once we get a feel for her capabilities (har), more possibilities will open up.

And you're right about the Sayaka thing, but if Kyoko's the best choice then we really don't need her approval. We're not trying to cuckold Sayaka, anyway.

And we should suggest she learn to do paperwork. Because it'd be better to have someone more experienced and combat-capable. Midori is utility and subterfuge.

I don't think we're giving enough thought to the 10th's agents, though.
Mirai was out there, waiting for us, on the same day that we arrived at the R&D lab. That is dangerously close to our own arrival. And that she was that close to the facility can't be a coincidence. Either the location of the facility is compromised, or Jyuubei can still track Midori.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/06/12(Sat)10:08 No.21012948

You are a Magical Girl, and you're getting comfortably sauced at the moment.

Calling up the handful of people who you think would be...sad, at least, to hear about your passing - an event that's likely to happen in a gruesomely violent manner.

Alone, in an archaic communications room with an imposing black monolith of a screen in front of you and a nearly empty bottle of vodka in your lap, you wonder, slightly, if there will ever come a time that you will be in this exact same situation and have no one to call.

You chuckle slightly to yourself as you dial Kyoko's number, checking to make sure you have her digits correct from your smartphone.

It's not even worth thinking about, really. Who are you fooling?

Pressing the SEND button just as you empty the nearly-killed bottle of vodka over your mouth, draining it completely, you close your eyes as you wait for the call to connect.

Of course it'll happen. It has never been a question of if, but when.

One day, you'll be all alone. No Misaka, no Midori, no Iori.

Maybe then you'll finally be able to stop ruining other people's lives, eh?

>> ☐ Deculture 10/06/12(Sat)10:09 No.21012951

Kyoko's phone rings once, twice, three times in succession. Opening your eyes a crack, you see the crimson script of [SOUND ONLY] on the screen in front of you blurring into existence once more.

The scarlet-haired Eversor picks up with a click on the fourth ring, and as she speaks, it sounds like she's in the middle of a snack.

Just like every other time you've called her, then. And to think she was talking about losing weight.

"Yeah, this is Sakura Kyoko. Uh, I don't have your number in my contact list, so you probably have the wrong number, or something, or I forgot to add you, or what." You smile at this somewhat awkward side of your usually-rowdy friend. "...Erm, who is this, anyway?"

You clear your throat, before announcing your identity.

"Huh? But I don't know any--oh, wait. Murderface. Yeah, Murderface! Yeah, I'm still not used to that name you're calling yourself, hahaha! I thought for a second that someone important was calling me! Like a movie star, or somethin'!"

She's got you there. Chiaki Matsuda does sound much too cute.

"So? What're you calling for? I thought you were getting shipped off to Siberia, or something." It's then that she pauses. "...Wait, you're calling me from Siberia? The hell, isn't that expensive?"

It probably is, but it's a company line, so you're not too concerned about that.

"Huh. Well, as long as you're not calling collect. Anyway, what'd you call for?"

How do you respond?

Midori sat up in bed, bits and pieces of the quite vivid dream still lingered in her thoughts. she felt sore, all of her muscles aching as if she had finished an exhausting exercise. Drowsily she looked around the room her gaze resting on a strange obscured form at the other end of the room, turning herself and resting her legs over the edge of the bed she rubbed her eyes in an attempt to clear her vision. Concentrating on the dark side of the room slowly she began to recognize the shape of a person just standing there, a she to be precise.

"S-sempai?" she muttered, exhaustion clear in her voice, responding to the title the figure moved in to the brighter side of the room, it was indeed the girl who had given her a chance at a better future for not only her but her parents as well, the person she loved and who would soon be her Warmaster.

"how are you... feeli-" her question cut short by a face drawing ever closer to her own, a Murderface if you will.

"i-is something wrong s-sempai?" her face close enough that she could feel her breath, smell the alcohol that her sempai had only recently consumed. could this be the progress she had been hoping for?

it was then that Chiaki 'Murderface' Matsuda spoke those unforgettable words in her deadpan tone of voice.

"Anime adaptation."

Midori felt the color leave her face.

You tell Kyoko, while making it a point not to go too much into detail, that you may be staying in Siberia longer than you'd anticipated. It's a possibility, of course, but she may as well know, just in case she comes looking for you.

"Huh? Oh, yeah! Mami sent me a message about that just a few minutes ago. Said you'll be stuck in Siberia for a while. Something about mandatory vacation time, or what." A small snap of what sounds like Pocky, followed by audible crunching. "I guess I'm pretty jealous of you getting that kind of thing, but man, why Siberia? It's not like some sort of vacation spot, is it? I mean, I know some people who go over there just to hunt bears, but it's not...like, Hawaii or something, right?"

Mandatory vacation time? Mami must be trying not to make a big deal out of your procedure. You'd been set on telling Kyoko about it, but Mami may be right here - you know that Kyoko'd probably worry, and in her concern, blab it around the Officio inadvertently. You could almost see Mami's logic in this - an upcoming Warmaster, especially one chosen by popular opinion, should not have rumors circulating about her failing health. That she was infirm enough to be sent overseas, on the Incubator's dime, no less, for treatment.

So you clamp down on that explanation and agree with that. Yes. Mandatory vacation time.

Even when she's having fun with someone else, Mami's still thinking of you.

That makes you feel a bit better about the situation.

You clear your throat after a few moments, before getting to the real reason of why you called. How would she feel about a promotion? Being your aide shouldn't be something of a nightmare scenario for her, right?

"Huh? A promotion? Aide to the Warmaster?" Kyoko asks, after a few moments. "Well, eh. I guess it depends, doesn't it? I mean, that takes me out of the assignment rotation, and while that's a kind of a plus, I'm not so sure about being a gopher and everything--" It's then that she stops.

"...Wait, why are you asking? You're not...I mean, I heard about rumors, but--" The scarlet-haired Eversor falls silen for a few moments. "...Whoa. So you really are going to be Warmaster, huh? That's...wow, seriously, Murderface, I never thought I'd see the day!" It's then that she hastily backpedals, just a bit. "E-er, I mean, I never really considered the possibility, that's all! I'm not saying it's impossible!"

Yes, yes, you get where she's coming from. You didn't believe it when you heard it from Kyuubey, either. You're still skeptical about the entire thing even now, really.

"That's awesome, though! I mean, Warmaster! The name already sounds cool! A-and you get to be like Kharn and stuff, your pick of the assignments, a-and not needing to attend those long and dry meetings! You've got the run of the place, now!" Kyoko is quite obviously ecstatic with the news. "Congratulations, Murderface! I gotta admit this is like out of left field for me, but I'm happy for you!"

You manage a smile at this. It's hard not to. Kyoko's happy enough for the both of you, and that counts for something.

"A-and yeah! If you want me to be your aide, I'm there!" Screw ecstatic, she's giddy about it. "Where do I sign? Ah, this'll be awesome, I'll be able to tag along whenever you have to go overseas and stuff! I'll be able to get all sorts of souvenirs for Saya--er, f-for me! Yeah!"

Tell her that we were actually considering something of a joint promotion. It would be amiss to create an arbitrary rank just to accommodate Sayaka (and she might be a bit insulted to accept such a thing), but separating the two of you is something that needs to be avoided. Perhaps expand the Rank Leader role to include shadowing the Warmaster and her aide to increase leadership skills or cultural exposure or something like that. And so that if something happens to the Warmaster during an operation, the Officio can more or less run smoothly until the Warmaster recovers or a new one is elected.

You lean back on the Incubator's chair. Mami's right - Kyoko would be perfect, as an aide. You're not exactly the paragon of diplomacy here, your idea of the concept is shoving guns in people's faces until an agreement is made.

In complete contrast, Kyoko is actually trying to smooth things along between you and Sayaka - and actually succeeding. Or at least, helping things along without being too overbearing about it.

You shake your head at this. Kyoko's long been considered by some Eversors and quite a few Vindicares as someone that's...well, not too sharp. Oh, of course the crimson-haired Eversor's quite the terror with a spear, and she's certainly no slouch with any polearm or segmented weapon - but you've heard that she's got the naivete to her that makes people think she's easy to trick or swindle.

A reason why, you suspect, that she may never get promoted at all.

You've got the sneaking suspicion that Kyoko has more under her sleeve than she's currently letting on, and that the others' perception of her is something that she absolutely has no problem with.

Maybe she even prefers it that way. Who knows?

"Murderface? Murderface, are you still there? Hello?" There's a burst of painful static - Kyoko seems to be blowing on her phone's receiver. "Yo, Murderface! Come on, I'm not just talking to dead air here, am I?"

[1/2]

>>21013939

You wince at this, before you reply that you are still in fact on the line. You reply that her request is reasonable - in fact, it's the reason why you called. You're privy to their relationship, and the worst thing you could do as Warmaster would be to drive a rift between the both of them with a promotion.

You also note the benefit of not having to worry about having an unfortunate accident in the near future, one that involves you 'accidentally' falling facefirst into a dozen swords.

"Nah, she wouldn't do something like that. Come on, Murderface, she's not that bad."

She tried to make a pincushion of your kidneys back at Mami's apartment, not too long ago. Of course she's not that bad.

"That was an accident! She didn't know it was you!"

You rest your case. But...suppose if you promoted the both of them, at once? This way, Sayaka would be able to be with Kyoko the entire time - and you'd have someone who absolutely hate your guts to check you every so often, make sure you're making the right decisions. If anything, Sayaka could take it as training for Rank Leadership.

"...Hey, that's not bad. Not bad at all, Murderface! Yeah, that'd definitely work!" Kyoko's spirits seem to lift again. "Yeah, we'd have to work at making her buy it, but I think we've got a chance!" The red-haired Eversor seems to be overjoyed. "Ah, Murderface, this is great. This means I don't have to worry about her being alone on assignments and all!"

Yes. You wouldn't mind having two of the Officio's best Eversors watching you back, too.

"Hah. Now you're just buttering me up. But yeah, don't worry about it. Do you want me to bring it up with Sayaka myself, or you want to do it? Either way's fine."

It's probably better if you break the news to Sayaka yourself. She hates you, but your rank at least will give her reason to listen, even for a little bit. And a little bit should be all that you need.

"Yeah, alright. Cool." Kyoko laughs. "I can't believe it! Aides!" A moment. "Er, just don't order her around, okay, Murderface? Like, not make her get you coffee or booze or anything. She'll take a bullet for you, probably, but please don't turn her into your secretary."

You can't help but chuckle at the mental image. As fitting as that may be, you reassure Kyoko that you won't be doing such things to Sayaka. You're not THAT suicidal, yet.

"Yet." Kyoko replies. "Ah, well, you know what you're doing. Anything else you want to say? I, uh, I kinda need to get back home. Just got out from a debriefing, here, Sayaka'll be waiting at home with dinner. Or breakfast."

Is there anything else you want to say?

"The Tenth Incubator? Huh, now there's a thing." Kyoko seems surprised at the news. "Yeah, I know about the Pleiades Saints. I think I met one of them during a Witch hunt. Didn't catch her name, but she looked cute enough. Kind of bite-sized, though, really runty. Black hair, earrings, staff shaped like a cross. She was polite enough, called me sempai and everything. Her costume, though..." It's here that your future aide chuckles. "Man, I mean, I've seen some raunchy costumes in my time, but...I don't even know how she can run in it, much less move and fight. You could almost see her--"

You cut her off there. Yes, yes, no need for her to lose focus right now. She's on the clock, remember? In any case, she should at least watch out for them. Probably a good idea to tell Sayaka to do the same, as well.

Speaking of Sayaka, how is she, anyway? You try and suppress a smirk. You'd never thought you'd actually be concerned for the intolerable cunt.

"You guys really hate each other, eh?" Kyoko sighs at this. "She's doing alright. Doing great, actually. She's all hyped up about being Rank Leader, too, says it's been a long time coming. She said she'd thank you in her inaugural speech about killing off her only competition, but then she decided against it. Says Misaka was the one who did it, after all." The red-haired Eversor laughs, lamely. "Y-yeah. That's...that's Sayaka for you."

I try to tell her it's fine, that it'll heal back, but she'll have none of it. It's...it's kinda cute in a way, really, and--"

...Do people in relationships talk about their partners like this, ALL the time? If so, then maybe there's merit to you staying alone, then...

"...Anyway. I'm near the front door now, so, uh, I have to go." A moment. "Murderface?"

You blink at the screen. "Yeah?" You ask.

"Come back alive, alright?"

...Sayaka should know just how lucky she is. You nod at the screen, knowing full well that such a gesture'd be pointless - but you do so anyway, with a smile and a reassurance that you'll do your best too.

I'm kind of torn between Sayaka and Kyuubey. Sayaka will want to know about our plans for her, but that might really kill off the mood since she's all hyped up about being Rank Leader. It might be good to think of a way to present it so that it doesn't seem like we're blocking her from becoming Rank Leader, but rather elevating her past it.

It may also be a good idea to notify QB about Mirai's presence here. Either the tenth incubator is snooping around where he/she/it shouldn't be, or QB mucked up on the contract transfer. But on the other hand, QB's sage advice may not end up well for Midori if he's intent on preserving company secrets.

I am still thinking about what Mami was doing in the last thrend. Perhaps what we ended up doing is landing Pinky a Mami corruption opportunity

Perhaps Iori and Mami met, Iori got emotional because of a rebound from us and looked to Mami for comfort. Mami was going to refuse until pinky came and wispered things like "Poor girl. You tired to give both her and your friend some happiness but look what has happened. Why don't you comfort her Mami-san? You both deserve comfort, You of all people deserve comfort."

We have no evidence that this has happened though.

One last call. Yeah. Just one more.

You close your eyes briefly, reaching up with one hand to take your glasses off pinch the bridge of your nose, before massaging your temple. The vodka seems to have hit you harder than you think. Thankfully, the greasy bear meat you've taken alongside the booze seems to be helping, at the very least.

You open your eyes - before blinking at the screen. The number displayed on the screen itself, you've...you've dialed Iori's number, without even knowing. You didn't even realize you were punching it in.

You freeze at that very moment. Waiting for a ring, that, after a few minutes' worth of wating, never came.

...Well, at least you didn't press SEND. That would've been...bad. Maybe. You're not sure, but you're not at all ready to talk to Iori yet. Not...not just yet.

Carefully you delete the numbers, and dial in a different one. One you've known all your life, or at least, as far back as you can remember. As you do so, you call Kharn back into the room. She'd want to be here, at the very least. Your former partner does so, her curiosity piqued - until she recognizes the number, which makes her smile slightly.

The call initiates and connects in the very first ring. This surprises you, but not as much as the fact that the screen in front of you no longer shows the two-word disclaimer that you'd only be working with audio - it activates to show a slightly-blurry, slightly-flickering picture of Kyuubey, the Ninth Incubator. Sitting in his chair, in his office, in front of that impressive computer array - and now sitting in front of you, through the wonders of long-distance communication.

"Drinking on the duty again, I see. Matsuda, please try to set a better example as Warmaster. Yes, I'm sure you're still training, but there are standards to uphold." His gaze seems to then flick to your former partner who's standing just behind you, one of her clawed hands resting on your chair's back rest. "Ah. Kharn. Thank you for joining us. "No. No trouble." Kharn shakes her head, the smile going wider just a bit. "Murderface has been behaving, do not worry."

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/10/12(Wed)10:44 No.21068324

You are a Magical Girl, and for as long as you can remember, you've always fantasized about killing the smug-faced mutant cat that you have as a boss. It's almost disturbing how the mere sight of the thing made your skin crawl and your trigger finger itch. It's almost as if your entire body - even your mind - was hard-coded to immediately hate it, from its beady red eyes to the tip of its white, fluffy tail.

You've let yourself succumb to the temptation, too. A couple of times. Well, maybe more than a handful, with the one back at Mami's apartment your latest attempt. You probably shouldn't count that one, it didn't really feel satisfying at the time - especially when there were scads of him running around like a damn swarm of fluffy, smiling rats. Tossing a grenade into the fray would've been a bit better, but Mami's apartment didn't need to be torn up more.

YOur first time...well, that was particularly satisfying. Mami had taken you up to his office to introduce you to the critter for the first time, Kyoko and Sayaka accompanying you. Sayaka wasn't as much of a bitch to you as she was then, and she had actually spent the night prior brushing your hair out before braiding them.

The look of complete and utter shock on her face as you reduced the smiling white mutant cat into mist with a shotgun blast is something that you hope that you will never, ever forget.

What you wish you could forget, though, was the first time Mami looked at you with disappointment.

After profusely apologizing to the new mutant cat that seemed to materialize out of nowhere, your personal goddess of victory and pancakes glanced at you, a look of hurt and betrayal on her face. It was there for barely a second, before she glanced towards a stunned Kyoko and ordered her to get you out of the room.

The first of many. The first in a long line of disappointments.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/10/12(Wed)10:46 No.21068338

A string of failures that you'll probably have to work your ass off in trying to break, seeing as you're stuck with this whole Warmaster gig. You're not really looking forward to that, just as much as you're not looking forward to the treatment, or whatever it is Kharn won't tell you. For all you know you'd end up just like her, metal claws and a fetish for blondes and all.

You take out your pack of cigarettes from your inventory and light one. You offer Kharn the box wordlessly, and smiling, she takes one carefully with her brutally-clawed fingers, placing the stick between her lips and then leaning down close to your face to light the tip against yours. A couple of puffs, and she draws back, the both of you breathing smoke in the cramped room.

But maybe it'll be all worth it, in the end, right? Maybe if you pull this off all nice and proper, Mami'll actually be proud of you for once.

"Matsuda?" Kyuubey says after a moment. "...Your report, please?"

Oh, yeah. You were supposed to say something to the cat.

What do you report?

The tenth sent an assassin to deal with Midori. Midori tried talking her down, but negotiations fell through. The assassin was able to control the local bear population, and used them to effective lengths. They were dealt with, and the magical girl incapacitated.

Everyone ate bear steaks with the most victorious attitudes. We have yet to interrogate the prisoner.

Incident with one of the Tenth's(?) magical girls. Attacked our patrol, supposedly for the purpose of recapturing or liquidating Midori.

However, she was a bear user/controller, and in light of this the string of bear attacks in greatly unusual intensity prior to our arriving here is extremely suspicious. I am suspecting that chasing down Midori may be a cover, probably to disguise an attempt at infiltrating or attacking this facility.

I intend to interrogate her to ascertain more accurate information. For the time being, I recommend caution, but no overt action. Losing one of their top agents is retaliation enough, unless they choose to escalate matters.

First ask Kharn how long the Murderbears have been a problem and state that Mirai has likely been around for that length of time. She claims she was here for Midori, but Midori only just arrived so this is likely a cover story for something the 10th Incubator is planning.

"I see. One of the Tenth's, you say? And Midori tried to talk her down, but she nevertheless pursued an aggressive course of action?" Kyuubey tilts its head slightly to the side, its expression unchanging. "Hm. And you say that the bears she attacked with was reported to be behaving strangely even before you got there? Kharn, can you verify this?"

Your former partner and Warmaster takes a deep drag from her cigarette, and it's then that you hear her fleshmetal fingers clink together as she plucks her cigarette from her lips, gesturing at Kyuubey with it. "This is true. The bears near the R&D base have been unpredictable as of late. Long before before the Warmaster arrived."

You glance up at her at the use of the title, brow furrowing, and she smiles down at you, before glancing back at the screen.

"Maybe it is just nothing, but I share Murderface's suspicions. The Tenth Incubator may be playing the silly buggers game with us." Kharn nods at Kyuubey, before placing her cigarette back between her lips. "I have taken the liberty of increasing security around the base. Double patrols, automated sentries, shoot on sight policy. If anyone so much as tries to infiltrate us, we go into automatic lockdown."

Kyuubey nods back, seemingly satisfied, before seemingly focusing on you. "Are you taking notes, Matsuda? That's what a Warmaster does. Try and learn from Kharn while she's still around for you to learn from her." This elicits a giggle from your friend. "You have my permission to interrogate this Wakaba Mirai. See what you can find out from her, what the Tenth's plans may be. If she proves resistant, destroy her immediately - we've no need to a potential Witch situation inside that facility. Is that clear?"

You nod.

The Incubator's seem to change slightly at this, as if suddenly defensive, but maybe that's just your paranoia talking. You can't say for sure.

"Is that the extent of your report, or is there anything else you wanted to add, Matsuda?"

How do you respond?
